DEAD SMART

Gora movies have a difficult press. Lambasted for their violence, they are often the subject of the outraged howls of politicians and of the peck-a-boo mentality of the tabloid press. At the one end of the spectrum there are, of course, splatter movies full of gratuitous junk; but now and again, at the classier end of the scale, a cult film emerges from the mire — and to considerably wider acclaim.

One such movie, and the inspiration behind Ubisoft's forthcoming Zombi, was "Dawn of the Dead".

You and your merry band of helicopterists have landed on the roof of an out-of-town shopping mall in desperate search for fuel and supplies. In the meantime, hordes of zombies are running amok in the foodstore, dissecting the TV dinners and in search of human flesh. To add to your problems, the petrol station's wrecked and the only way to get fuel is to syphon the tanks of the Harley Davidsons in the parking lot (a chapter of homicidal Hell's Angels have turned up as well).

Zombi sounds bizarre. If a colleague gets bitten you'll have to drag him to the freezer before rigor mortis sets in. But if you get bitten, your only way out is to take your own life.

By all accounts Zombi will be a blackly hilarious game, and what seems set to be a successful licence is softshop-bound, on all formats, towards the end of the year.

DAS BOOT (THE GAME?)

OK, we're telling a little porky pie here. Alas, the excellent TV series, "The Boat", is not up for licence, but it has been a treat to watch the recent rerun on BBC Two — and by way of an immensely fantastic coincidence, this neatly allows the Buzzboys to make a tenuous link with a software deal.

Wolfpack will be out soon on the Amiga, as a result of the recently confirmed contract between Mirrorsoft and Novologic Inc.

Claim Mirrorsoft, Wolfpack aims to be one step ahead of yer average WWII submarine war game. Move about from ship to ship, as you establish individual command centres, withdraw and activate overall battle strategies, or use the construction element to shape parts of the game from scratch. All of this with the intention of simulating the battles between Allied surface vessels and the Nazi Wolfpack submarine fleet.

Scheduled for a Winter release, there'll be more on this watery epic in a none-too-distant issue

TIN POT DICTATORS

In some other time, in some other place, an iron curtain is descending on the galaxy. Hordes of robotmonsters are massing up there in preparation for an all-out attack on the Earth.

Escape from the Planet of the Robot Monsters has been doing the rounds of the software press of late in the form of arcade reviews.

But with a smidgen of its release, Alan's new coin-op has been snapped up by the Domark label. Tengen.

Arcadesters and strategy fans will be able to join in with the galactic palaver and beam down to rescue human slaves who are imprisoned on Planet X.

Escape from the Planet of the Robot Monsters is set to follow fellow Tengen games, Toonin and Dragon Saint, shortly after the turn of the year. Cute and campy arcade adventures look set to become flavour of the month right now. Let's hope that this one's a cracking example.

USG AT 4 O'CLOCK

Down your flying jacket and polish the flaps on your little leather hat. Hard on the tail of CRL's Lancaster comes the latest WWII flight sim. Lucasfilm's forthcoming Their Finest Hour: The Battle of Britain promises as stirring a combat simulator as you're likely to find this side of a British banger—or a knockwurst, for that matter.

Take to the skies as a pilot for the Luftwaffe—or for His Majesty's RAF—and do battle. Choose yourself a name like Algernon, Pimp or Max and handle such flying myths as the Supermarine Spitfire, the Junkers 87 (Stuka), the Hawker Hurricane or the Messerschmitt 110. From what we're told, Their Finest Hour will have photographic realism, smoke, flak and the rat-a-tat-tat of a jolly good dog fight.

If you turn out to be a fighter ace, you'll get the chance to win the Victoria Cross or its German equivalent. Our patriotic ad man here, Wing Commander Thomas Glenister, has been drooling about the prospect, not to mention the Spitfire flight at USG's forthcoming launch: "Damn, lads," he's told CU Towars, "I'm really going to fly!"

But for those of you whose thrills come disk-shaped, Their Finest Hour: The Battle of Britain will be available, we're reliably informed, to pop into your Christmas sock.

They came from the outer regions of Alpha Centauri, built their stations deep under the water and then they attacked the Earth... Subaquea jiggery pokery will be onscreen for the festive season with X-OUT, Rainbow Arts' latest shoot 'em up.

The superpowers have scraped together their pennies to produce Project Deep Star, a monster submarine with the firepower to send the nasties to their watery dooms. Expect loads of power-ups, extra weapons and very pretty pictures.

THE SEARCH FOR SHARLA

Reminds you of the summer, sk? Thalania's The Search for Sharla takes place, in fact, above a planet which does seem to have an extraordinarily bright sun and twelve moons which reflect its light to boot.

Go a-journeing over the surfaces of the twelve, and underneath them too amongst dungeons and caverns. Each moon boasts a mighty five-hundred-and-twelve characters, which, for those of you of an arcade adventure frame of mind, should make for some in-depth gameplay.

One of the moons, apparently, has pink skies, flurly clouds and an 'ice environment'. So it's hello ice, hello sky and hello Sharla, when you find whoever Sharla may be.

"Drive your snow scooter at speeds of up to 180km! Venture through snow forests with mountains! Travel along the snow course which passes through twenty-five villages! Try out the many different courses on your snow scooter. Kill Bambi..."

Hold on. It doesn't mention that last bit in our press release, but judging from this screenshot we're all agog as to what the true plot actually is to Cocktail Vision's Snidoo. "Watch out for hazards along the way... It's a matter of skill to survive." The plot thickens.

Will Santa's reindeers be slayed? Find out, perhaps, in CU's Crimble issue.

TONGUE OF THE FATMAN

Now this brings a whole new meaning to fighting the Sab. Mondo-the-fat is the none-too-charming host of the Fight Palace, a stadium where all of the oddballs in the Universe slug it out for mammoth amounts of money.

Make no mistake, Mondo may be twice as wide as a London bus, but he's cruel, sharp and you'll have to take him on if you defend the rest of your opponents.

Tongue of the Fatman will be the first of the new crop of releases from Activision's American publishing arm, and will be out on the Amiga early next year.

THE FINAL BATTLE

The Final Battle is the follow up to The Legend of the Sword. Free this hero from the cell, rescue your colleagues and go in search of the wizard who you once imprisoned in a tiny tear drop!

From thereon your progress will be assisted or hindered by whichever climate the computer happens to choose. Whether or not this means that you have to yowl your adventurer with a barometer, as well as the usual broadsword, the publishers aren't letting on.

EUROPEAN SUPERLEAGUE

Now this isn't a game for the slight of mind. Those of you who'll be playing this game are going to have to balance training schedules, bolster squad morale and confidence, contend with boardroom politics, a fickle press coverage AND still have to cope with seven other stubborn, opinionated managers. The only people you're not up against are those who don't play football.

European Superleague, from CDS, will be with you shortly on both 16 and 8-bit.

800 CINCHER

Looks, perhaps, like Space Harrier? You, your sidekick and wave upon waves of insectoid enemies have just one thing in mind — the complete destruction of every human being they set their nasty little bug eyes on. You know how to deal with the situation — if it's ails, kill it! Sure beats using man repellent.

This game sounds as subtle as a prod with a pitchfork. And it should be out on the Amiga before you can say — well — 'insectoctor'.

DRAKKHEN

The world was created and sustained by the powerful forces of The Great Dragons. With the death of the last of them came the end of the old world and the dawning of the new. In his agony, the dragon cried out: "Anhak Drakkhen Agnahr Hurdt!".

Verily, the plot may be stuff and nonsense but, judging from the preview at the PC Show, the actual game does seem avar so good.

And you'll be able to judge for yourself when Infogrames's Drakkhen is released on the Amiga.

BOOK OF RECORDS LICENCED

Robert Maxwell-owned software, Compact Solutions, has signed up the rights to The Guinness Book of Records. The edition will contain the complete fifteen thousand entries plus animated sequences and sound. The Guinness Book of Records will initially be available on Apple CD Rom only, but Compact Solutions claim that an Amiga version may be a future possibility.

The 1990 edition of the book includes three thousand new entries and Compact Solutions has included them all as well as the colour photos. The animated sequences and sound have been especially commissioned and include cartoon versions of the Hiroshima bombing and The Great Plague and the sound of the longest belch on record. Wonder who they sampled that one from?

MIRROR TO THE FUTURE

Mirrorsoft have an original game that's full of madness, mayhem and magical maylarky. Theme Park Mystery is a whodunnit-style arcade adventure set in and around the four zones at a Gothic playground.

Somewhere in Future Land, Yesterday Land, Dream Land or Dragon Land has the answer to the mystery of why the theme park's ex-owner, your grand daddy, has completely lost his marbles. You should have realised. If you inherit a land full of fortune tellers then something decidedly spooky will happen.

Theme Park Mystery, published on the Imageworks label, will be available this winter for the Amiga.

WET WET WET

Three Sufy Satellites have been launched to create the Sufatfield, a protective barrier for the ozone layer. The satellites have been launched from the Fissionchip Science Multiplex. Frogmen use Addictive breathable gas, and meanwhile, The Prism Intelligence Agency are tracking the seas for signs of aliens, who, naturally, are nowhere near as peaceable as us Earthlings.

Aquanaut, which is the follow-up to the hugely successful, The Krystal, has been 'co-ordinated' by Michael Sunm, programmed by Fissionchip Software Ltd and is published by Prism Leisure through their Addictive label. Will the manual contain an in joke, we ask?

Let's hope, however, that, this time round, Fissionchip Software won't deem it necessary to program in a soft porn subtext, as one shocked CU journal discovered had happened when he was invited to a preview of The Krystal.

COIN-OP DEAL

ESG have signed another crop of coin-op conversions. Starting off with Capcom's Dynasty Wars, the Brummie softies have a number of licences to work on, including Sega's excellent Crackdown.

And so the first of these games will see you facing the myriad hordes of Chinese, feudal Robber Barons. Dynasty Wars is one of Capcom's more recent coin-ops and has been an arcade hit since its release.

Crackdown will be programmed by the Forgotten Worlds development team, Arc. The game is progressing well, we're informed and should see the light of day at the end of December. Both Forgotten Worlds and Crackdown will be available for the Amiga and the 64.

INTELLIGENT LIFE

The Intelligence Men are the newly formed development team who take their name from one of the two Morecombe and Wise movies of the 1960s.

Now it has to be said that the film in question was nowhere near as popular as its small screen equivalent, but that hasn't deterred the embryonic softcos: "It's one of my favourite films," admitted Chief of Intelligence, the plucky Andy Cravin. The Intelligence Men seem set to sign their first game Twenty-first Century Fast Food Blues to a major software house.

Twenty-first Century Fast Food Blues is set in a time when the only building that remains in the City of a Thousand Cheeseburgers is the chain of fast food restaurants owned by the infamous Burger Barons, overweight controllers of the Planet.

You play one of the last vegetarians on Earth through a variety of scenarios. Your ultimate aim is to hijack a chopper and lob a double thick clotted cream bomb into the nuclear oven of the Fries Building. Far too many games have a very thin storyline, but the emphasis here is fat, fat, fat.

This gourmand's game may be coming your way. The Intelligence Men are part of the successful Vektor Graphics group.

GOLDMUNTER 3D

It's a classic Western, but with a 3D twist. You play as a lone cowboy in a vast, open world. The game is set in a desert landscape with a variety of terrain and weather conditions. You can explore the world at your own pace, and there are many hidden treasures and secrets to be discovered. The game is a great example of how 3D graphics can be used to create a rich and immersive world.

HIGHWAY PATROL 2

A colorful and fun game for children. It features a variety of characters and levels. The game is designed to be both educational and entertaining. It includes puzzles, mazes, and other challenges that help children develop their problem-solving skills. The graphics are bright and appealing, making it a great choice for young players.

RANDOLPH THE ROBOT

After Outrun Turbo, Vektor and Hard Driver comes the 3D driver Highway Patrol 2. The game is a classic car chase game. You play as a police officer chasing a criminal. The game features a variety of cars and a detailed desert landscape. The graphics are impressive, and the game is a great example of how 3D graphics can be used to create a realistic and exciting driving experience.

RANDOLPH THE ROBOT

As we've heard of Robbie Meyer, Mike's cousin, playing the Robot from "Lost in Space", but who the hell is Randolph the Robot? True to the word of Softman, he is "a Special Agent, programmed to think as well as hunt his way through whatever the growing horos of Cyber-Evil will pit against him". We've heard that now before.

"Very few games offer both high technical quality and long lasting playability," claims the games designer, Thorsten Meyer. "Randolph the Robot" came out as a 2D game in Spring 1988. The current version is a 3D game. It's a great example of how 3D graphics can be used to create a realistic and exciting driving experience.

BURNOUT

OUTRUN TURBO

US Gold's Outrun Turbo is set to join Pasverdriif, Vette and Chesa HQ in the race for the Crimble topspot. Predictably, we're told, it will be arcade perfect and very, very fast.

Certainly, the coin-op was a very slick affair and represented an upgrading of its predecessor by adding 3D and turbo and by changing the route from East Coast USA to The West.

The two main development teams, Glasgow-based Ice for the Amiga, and Probe for the 64, have been working on the game since June 24th this year. The key figures in the Scottish group have been Ien Morrison, who did the conversion of the original Outrun, and Martin Caine, who works solely on the Amiga. Outrun Turbo will be Martin's first major project.

The game itself has sixteen stages, each of which uses sixteen colours. A number of the special sequences have been taken from the coin-op, amongst them the game over and congratulations screens. The sound, too, has been sampled with the exception of one of the two end-of-game jingles, which Ice describe as originally being "too noisy".

Ice Software haven't been around for too long, but claim that they're already making a name for themselves as being a quick and efficient outfit. They are a splinter group formed partly from Probe and prides itself on the principles of quality production and scientific management.

"We have worked closely with Probe," claims Ice's general manager, David Smallwood, "It's in both of our interest to see that our products reflect well on each other. We started out by mapping and screenbetting the coin-op then made all of the material available to Probe."

The Amiga version of Outrun Turbo will be available in December and everyone involved is confident that they're come up with the goods. "With the exception of the frame rate, it's hard to tell the difference from the arcade."

CU will find out whether this claim is true. The Amiga version of Outrun Turbo will be out in December.

As with the coin-op, the scenery changes from state to state and from night to day

BUSHIDO

THE WAY OF The WARRIOR

Bushido, the Way of the Warrior, is a new action strategy game set in feudal Japan. The leader of one of the largest clans has entrenched himself in a well-guarded fortress. Large-scale attack has already failed and it is your task to infiltrate this fortress with a single man and thus regain control of the area.

At your disposal are several characters, ranging from a monk to a Samurai warrior. Each has his own special qualities, from sheer strength in hand-to-hand combat, to guile and cunning. Your warrior does, however, have a magical belt which can transport him back to base and safety if his life is severely endangered. Once there he can re-train the extra skills needed and attempt another assault on the fortress.

CREATING

ECO

Ocean's first 18 bit release offered gamers one of the biggest challenges they've ever faced. It simulated an entire 3D ecosystem and then asked them to evolve from the lowest form of life to the most intelligent. Now you can play the game of evolution free with CU.

INSTRUCTIONS

Each game of Eco is different. The computer randomly selects a world from a vast range of planets with different populations and weather. You begin with a simple insect creature.

The first priority is to find food to sustain the insect's energy. This allows it to mature and grow. Once it has matured it can find a mate to reproduce. The result is an offspring which is also genetically different from its parent. It has moved a stage up the ecological ladder. Each stage of reproduction allows the player to unlock a gene. Unlocking eight genes allows the player to evolve to the highest level of life.

CONTROLS

The game is controlled via mouse or keyboard. The creature can be controlled using the joystick or by activating the joystick control icons with the mouse. When the creature dies and the simulation continues until one of the skill icons is selected. Will life ever go on doesn't it?

MENU

GENE DESIGN SCREEN

When the player reproduces the main screen is replaced by the gene designer. This displays an enlarged version of the genetic code indicator, three different views of the offspring, an information box and several icons.

Eight genes control the appearance and behaviour of all the organisms in Eco. Many of the genes interact and affect each other in complex ways. The genes that can be altered are indicated by a small key symbol. To change a gene point at it with the mouse, hold down the left button and drag it to a new position, or select the dice icon which selects a unlocked gene at random. An exit icon at the bottom of the screen switches play back with the new infant creature installed.

THE LOST PATROL (PLAYABLE DEMO)

With the ideas of interactive movies firmly installed in everyone's imagination, the games buying public is hungry for more. We've seen Kurosawa epics, heard about B movie beasties, but what better topic for its treatment than Vietnam. Already a movie genre in its own right with a mass of films ranging from John Wayne's propaganda shock 'Green Beret' to classics like 'The Deerhunter', and 'Apocalypse Now'. More latterly there's been 'Platoon', 'Full Metal Jacket' and an endless string of made for video pulp. The Lost Patrol aims to be the first 16 bit 'Nam movie, and Ocean's demo is a chance for you to see the trailer and get a taste of the action.

Deployment hinges on your leadership qualities plus your ability to deal with the pressures of jungle warfare. You have to learn the techniques used in fighting a war often waged against an unseen enemy.

Programmed by Shadow Development, the game has been nine months in development. It's unsurbed a brilliant new graphics artist in Ian Harting, since this is his first project.

ICONS

1. The grid icon is used to show the visible terrain around your position.
2. 'M' icons tell you to the morale screen where the strength, injuries and morale is detailed. Scouts (or pentment) and lead man can also be set from the screen.
3. The compass icon is used to move your team in whichever direction you decide, clicking up on the centre of this icon reveals a menu and you decide the speed at which to move. Examine the terrain closely!
4. Scroll map using arrow keys. Release from this mode using the left mouse button.
5. Various actions can be accessed by using the right mouse button on the menu bar above the text slot at the bottom of the controls. The font you issue to your men and whether you rest, dig-in, or merely search the area will be governed from here.

POWER DRIFT — (PLAYABLE DEMO)

Undoubtedly one of the biggest arcade hits this year has been Power Drift. It's a classic mix of off-road racing and, ahem, hard driving.

The game lets you choose from among twelve drivers over five courses. Each driver has his own personality. There's Jason the skinhead wad given to making offensive gestures as he overtakes, or a Mr T look-alike who shakes his fist, a sultry blonde and a yuppie.

Where most racing games tend to be set in grand prix-like courses, Power Drift transports the competitors to a bizarre wooden roller coaster contraption. The affect of racing at high speed is much like a funfair ride after several pints of cream soda and five hot dogs.

The 64 version is being programmed by Chris Butler who was responsible for major hits like Space Harrier, 720° and Thunderbirds. Chris' trademark is high speed scrolling and this is probably his fastest game yet.

INSTRUCTIONS

Load the cassette as normal. When game has loaded you can race through one section of the game. Use joystick to steer left and right. Forward and back to speed up and slow down. Fire changes to high and low gear. Well no surprises there so off you go.

RAMPAGE

One of the defter coin-op conversions over the years, Rampage was a CU Screen Star when it appeared in the Christmas of '87 and now it's yours free with this month's issue.

INSTRUCTIONS

The concept behind Rampage shines with beautiful simplicity: destroy everything in the best hobnob monster trailer you (and two other players) can take control of huge beasts and run amok through 60 American cities.

The idea is simply to inflict as much damage as possible whilst sustaining as little. Eating inedible items such as toasters and TVs will inflict damage as will being shot by troops. Damage is indicated by the energy bars at the top of the screen. Leap off buildings before they collapse; being caught in the masonry will result in further energy loss.

CONTROLS

Players with joysticks use the four directions and the fire buttons. A third player can use the keyboard (see table below). Left and right enable the monsters to walk across the screen or rooftops and up and down allows them to climb and descend buildings. Pressing fire on its own makes the monster jump. Pressing fire whilst pointing in a direction throws a punch or makes a monster grab.

WIN £500 OF SOFTWARE

Salut! Wie geht es? Gdday! Ciao! Hola! Hëir är läget? Never mind 1992, we Brits are ready to go European right now! CU is breaking down those national barriers with a competition for overseas readers only. We frequently receive letters from foreign readers saying our competitions aren't open long enough for them to take part. Well this one's for you!

We're offering you the chance to win £500 of free software just by answering a few easy Euro flavoured questions. The money is divided up into sections: 1st prize = £250, 2nd prize = £150, 3rd prize = £100. That's software at UK prices too!

How do you win? Just answer three of our typically easy questions:

- 1 What artificial language was designed in 1887 to allow people of all nations to communicate?
- 2 Where is the European Court of Human rights?
- 3 Who won the European Cup (soccer) last season?

Send your entries, together with your name and address, stating your age, and the computer you own to CU Euro Compo, Priory Court, 30-32 Farringdon Lane, London EC1R 3AU, England. This competition is only open to overseas readers. To qualify you must have an address outside the United Kingdom. The competition closes on January 1st to give everybody between here and Oz a chance to receive the mag and return their entry.

When the sun Dials slips out of sight on the far side of the planet Eris — an unsuspecting Erisian could be forgiven for believing that all was well with the universe — such is the beauty of the spectacle. The Oceanic world of Eris is populated by nine islands with the inhabitants living in single city states. Almost all of its surface is water — making it glow like a giant sapphire as it resides in the fifth position in the Gamma Galaxy. But a catastrophe is about to befall Eris. The comet Damocles is hurtling towards it and will collide in a few short hours unless you can prevent it from doing so. But how?

Damocles is the sequel to the classic Mercenary — in which the player had to escape from the planet Targ. Damocles takes up the story after the player has succeeded in completing all the tasks and earned enough to purchase a ship to escape from Targ. You can enter this achievement, and anything you brought with you from Tang, into the sequel and continue with the adventure. If not, don't worry, as the game stands alone.

One thing Mercenary visitors will be ecstatic about is that Benson is back. Benson is a Ninth Generation PC, a helmet-mounted computer, who soon becomes more of a companion than a mere computer as you explore the nine planets and the numerous moons that surround the star Dials. Benson has a dry wit, but is no mere joker as he will provide you with lots of clues as to where to find certain objects that you will need to complete the mission.

Although, superficially, Damocles resembles the Amiga version of Mercenary — in the gameplay department it is very much more sophisticated. This has been greatly improved by the control you have over the objects that you can collect. You can actually use them to carry out tasks — rather than just placing them in the correct location, as you did in Mercenary. When you select an item it appears in the Damocles window at the center of the control panel. Together with instructions on how to use it, Novager also gives much away about these objects, as their selection and use is central to the main task of stopping that comet — by whatever method you can. One of the items, however, is the camera. One of the neatest bits of design that this increasingly popular type of Amiga game has seen in a long time. You can control certain objects remotely. This means if you cannot prevent the comet crashing into Eris — stick a camera on one of its moons and watch the fireworks. Similarly if there is anything else you want to keep an eye on, you should go get the camera and set it up. A spin-off benefit that has resulted from the work that went into developing the camera is that you can also take remote control of the ship. There is no major benefit in terms of the overall objective of the game — but it sure is fun. Fly around buildings — under bridges — take a few pops at things, it makes for excellent light relief from the main business of attempting to prevent the demise of Eris. You can take remote control of various land vehicles — speeding down the road networks in the Damocles cabs. Again, not quite in the Continental Circus league — but as incidental entertainment it is unrivalled.

Intelligent life is found on all of the planets in the Gamma Solar System — and you will have to visit them all and explore all of the cities, searching buildings for useful objects if you are to save Eris. Again these structures represent another great improvement on Mercenary. Many of them are vast, like the Space Station, Parliament building, Lawson's Bank (if you don't, they charge 15% interest), or Highway's Wine Bar. A map room will provide useful information on getting around them but it doesn't tell you everything, and there is lots of good of exploring for you to do. One of the neatest buildings is the shop where you can place an item in the shop window, walk out of the shop, around to the front and see that same object exactly where you left it in the window. Knowing the value of commodities is crucial in Damocles as trading is just as vital to success as it was in Mercenary. Don't expect to find everything you need — some things have to be paid for in hard cash.

Would you trade a pressure suit for a computer?

Just two hours until Damocles crashes into the planet Eris.

DAMOCLES

Park your ship outside the building before exploring it on foot. You can look out from the windows to make sure it's OK.

A good deal of puzzling is required to destroy the comet — as is a close eye on the various timer controls. There is a lot to do to win, and not an awful lot of time in which to do it. A good deal of thought has gone into the timing in Damocles — which adds to the overall feel of the challenge. Novagen have weighted the various speeds of travel (near-light speed between planets) against the real-time clock which is ticking down all the time the game plays. Real time on the control planet clock represents the time left before the comet crashes into Eris. Just a few short hours. This doesn't mean you have to play the game for hours on end. There is a useful quit game and save option to let you pause and then restart whenever you like.

The heart of the gameplay in Damocles is in the puzzle element — the challenge of trying to prevent the catastrophes. Just as in Mercenary, any player worth his salt won't want to quit until they have escaped from Targ. The same is true of Damocles — but again just like Mercenary, there is stacks of fun to be had along the way, in exploring, using objects, and travelling through the graphically delightful Gamma Solar System. The sunsets on a variety of planets are splendid — and as well as this they are all performing mathematically accurate in terms of their geographical relationships to each other. This all contributes to creating a world which is entirely plausible from which ever angle you choose to explore it. Sure this has been done before — in things like Dark Side and, to a lesser extent in Star Glider II, but it has not yet been done as well.

Amiga gaming at its very best.

MANAGE THE MOST IMPORTANT PART OF THE FOOTBALL BUSINESS

Back The Glory Days. There's the brief of the newly appointed PLAYER MANAGER, an international class player, as he takes charge of a third division club. His success depends on four distinct aspects of the game:

- * LAYING THE TACTICS - You can choose from four well proven tactics or design your own.
- * MANAGING THE TEAM - You can select players from the Transfer Market and select a team to suit your tactics.
- * PLAYING THE GAME - You can play the game in a variety of ways, from a full season to a single match.
- * THE FOCUS - You can focus on any player in the team and see how he performs in the game.

Brief: Back The Glory Days. There's the brief of the newly appointed PLAYER MANAGER, an international class player, as he takes charge of a third division club. His success depends on four distinct aspects of the game:

LAYING THE TACTICS

This part of the game is a refined version of the KICK OFF, retaining it's pace, flavour and the universally acclaimed game play. Play in your position or control the nearest player. The first option combined with a tailor made tactics can play havoc in the opposition goal mouth.

MANAGING THE TEAM

Devising winning tactics, acquiring players with right skills from the Transfer market and selecting a team with the right balance is the task of the Managerial skills. He must aim to get promotion as quickly as possible while he can still influence the results as a player and before the eye starts to effect his pace and stamina. When to hang his boots up is the toughest decision he has to make.

Hosts of other factors like referees, injuries, disciplinary problems, team morale etc can say to waste the best laid plans of a manager. The PLAYER MANAGER brings everyday realities of a Manager's life, his talents as a manager and a player into a sharp FOCUS. THE FOCUS IS ON YOU.

TACTICS

Four well proven tactics are provided to suit most situations but you can design your own tactics. The pitch is divided in blocks. Place the ball in a block and move the players to the required position. Repeat the process for each block. See the tactics in action using the Race facility.

THE FOCUS

Over a thousand players in the four division leagues. Each player with a unique combination of the following attributes: SHOOTING ACCURACY, PASSING ACCURACY, PACE, STAMINA, APPLICATION, AGGRESSION, HEIGHT and TACKLING SKILL. These attributes are influenced by the player's Age, Mental and Physical Dexterity Quality of Experience, Weight, Temperament and Morale. There are several other factors such as injury, disciplinary points, unsuitable playing positions which influence a player's performance.

DRAGON SPIRIT

Time for a bronze-burger.

The valley before Time.

Dragon Spirit is one of those little-known arcade games which came and went without too much fuss, although it went down well with almost everyone who played it. Dragon Spirit then resurfaced in Japan as a very successful PC Engine game and now it's over here on the Amiga.

At first glance, the coin-op doesn't appear as anything more than your standard vertically scrolling shoot 'em up — kill the bad guys and collect the weapons. It's not until you sit down to some serious gaming that you really find out how good it is, but it has to be said that the Amiga version does lose out in translation. The original's strength was its fast graphics and quantity of weapons. The armaments are there but the speed has disappeared. Each level contains a variety of mythical dragons, phoenix's, to name but a few. Once again, there's the standard end-of-level foe to defeat.

You power up by collecting pods. These cause you to wieldy mutate. You can get three heads, breathe fire, gain electric shields. Wow! Unfortunately some of this does you more harm than good — one thing in particular reduces your dragon to a pigmy sized with homing missiles which wears out leaving you unarmed.

The graphic conversion of Dragon Spirit is near to arcade perfect, but it's not until things actually start happening that you realise how sluggish the gameplay is. The graphics are neither complicated or overly large, so why does it play so slowly?

Apart from the lack of speed Dragon Spirit is still a good game and a good shoot 'em up, though there are slack periods when you wonder if something is missing.

It also seems like a good opportunity to make a contribution to the Amiga/PC Engine debate. Having now played both versions of the game I can conclusively reveal that the PC Engine version is head, shoulders and ankles above the Amiga's graphics, speed, colour and sound. So there you go — a good game which falls in the conversion.

The American Civil War started in April 1861 when the southern — or Confederate — states decided to withdraw from the union with the northern — or Yankee — states in protest over the abolition of slavery. Eight years of bloody battle followed.

More recently, however, the TV mini-series North and South has gone down a bomb in France (as Les Bleus et Les Grns), and I've a sneaking suspicion that Infogrames' game has been more than a little inspired by it.

North and South gives you the once in a lifetime opportunity to relive in a wildly comical way the infamous interstate battles between the Union and the Confederates.

The main game is a map of the USA, divided up into two dozen large areas. Each of these areas can be one of four types: empty, Confederate owned, Union owned or occupied. Running through the map is a railway line with four stations. Dotted around the map at the start of the game are two Confederate armies and two Union armies. The idea of the game, like Risk, is to capture all the states on the map, or alternatively kill all the enemy soldiers on the map.

The game works in turns. At the start of a turn, all your occupied spaces flash. You can move all the troops in each occupied state, one space in any direction. If you try to move into occupied territory, you then have to do battle with the enemy.

As you move around occupying land, there are one or two things you must remember to do. Firstly, if you capture all the states between two stations on the railway line, the train will come along, carrying gold from station to station. With that gold you can buy new armies to replace all the old tired ones.

Looks like a train hopping sequence coming up

Also, there are one or two special locations on the map. When your opponent gets the train rolling, look where the train stops. That's his forties. Raid it for lots of money. The state in the top left-hand corner is Indian country. Hang around there for too long and those Indians get annoyed and throw a hatchet in your direction. On the right-hand screen, about halfway up, is a boarding point. Every two or three turns, a boat rolls up the river and drops an army off at that point.

There's more than one way of playing North and South. On the surface you can play it as either a straight strategy game or an arcade game with strategy elements.

The strategy game is just a very simple game of Risk. All battles are decided by who has the largest army and all other events are determined by the computer. In the action game you are responsible for all battles, castle raids and train robberies. This is where the game comes into its own.

The battles are brilliant. You are shown a distant view of the battle and from this view you can control footsoldiers, mounted horsemen, and artillery.

Both the fortress raid and the train robbery are played in the same way. Place at incredibly high speed along a scrolling play area leaping boxes and other obstacles, and punching, locking or knocking any guards away. All of these, including the battle are done with the same degree of humour that really makes the game.

NORTH & SOUTH

A nifty still interlude

The graphics are of a very high standard, as is the soundtrack, and that's what makes the game an instant hit. However, I'm sorry to say that the fun is a little short-lived. For some reason, the computer is very, very easy to beat. Rather than having any artificial intelligence it seems to follow the same pattern of moves every game. Aren't strategy games the ones that are supposed to keep you going for years?

Rumbling over the logs.

Finally we see the first of Activision's biggies for Chromo, a conversion of an extremely fast race machine. So how has cartia-racing legend Power Drift fallen into the 68000?

Not very well, as I expected. The problem lies with the machine. When an arcade programmer has an idea, he is given the hardware to carry that idea out. No matter how good a programmer is, the Amiga A500 hardware isn't going to improve, and so the new breed of arcade games are too difficult to carry across. Powerdrift is one of them.

Activision did try, and to be fair they haven't done an awful job. What they have come up with is as close as you're going to get. Unfortunately due to the limitations of the machine a few sacrifices had to be made. . .

The game is simple in design. Five courses, five stages to each, four laps of each stage. Come in the first three and progress to the next. As you race through the courses the bends get tighter, the jumps get bigger and the opposition gets tougher.

It is the courses that made the arcade version so impressive. Not satisfied with straight race along the ground and the occasional hill, Powerdrift's courses are full of tight bends, bridges, hills, jumps and dips. What this results in is a very packed screen, as you race under bridges, jump over bits of courses and even stop and watch cars racing elsewhere on the track, a feat only accomplished once before, in the Digital golden oldie Integrations 7.7. Racer.

The way the road was constructed in the arcade, and the system employed in the Amiga version, is by laying down strips of graphics, one behind the other to create a 3D image. The Amiga version contains less strips which makes the track look very broken, and also leads to some very confusing instances. For example, when you pass under a low bridge, all the strips blend together, and you end up with a smorgensbord of colour, rather than a carte race track.

The game is fast, but at the sacrifice of smooth scrolling, if you remember OutRun Amiga you'll know what I mean. There are plenty of times where you just can't tell if the road branches left or right, or indeed which part of the road you're supposed to be racing on. This ruins what could have been a good conversion, but now are you supposed to enjoy a racing game when you can't make out where you're meant to be racing?

There are one or two graphical touches thrown in. For example the way the viewpoint pans across the course before setting in the normal position. The special courses have been kept in too, on which you race an F-15 Afterburner style along and then the Super Hang On bits — a feature taken from the arcade original.

The soundtrack is good, but limited. The usual growls and squeals accompany your racing and there is some nice sampled speech that counts you in and also provides an audible lap counter.

A fan of the coin-op might enjoy this, I personally don't. It's nice to have a fast game, but when that speed means a loss of gameplay, then I'd rather have a slower game.

If you fear it, you might just come in third!

POWERDRIFT

Red sky at night, shepherd's delight.

As a straight conversion, 64 Powerdrift might not have the sophisticated programming techniques of the Amiga version, but as a racing game, it sure is a hell of a lot more fun.

The idea remains the same: Race through five courses, based over five stages, each with four laps. Complete in a field of twelve and finish within the top three to progress to the next stage. The controls are simple: up to accelerate, back to brake and fire to change between high and low gears.

— regardless of the amount of sprites on screen.

It plays really well for the most part. The controls are responsive and tight, and the feel is just right. The unusual thing is the way the difficulty level progresses. Rather than make the turns tighter, or the opposing cars harder to avoid, you lose traction on the road from about the third stage on each course. On the first couple of stages you can quite happily burn round light corners at high speed, but after that you're lucky if you can get round the easiest of bends in low gear without crashing into a roadside object.

Powerdrift 64 is far superior to the Amiga version: it plays with all the fast paced tenzy of the arcade original. Given the choice I sure know which version I'd choose.

DAY OF THE PHARAOH

No you don't have to play the part of a mummy. Actually, you are a high ranking Pharaoh. The game is set sometime between 2300bc and 2500bc and it's the governor's task to rule his province and win favour in the eyes of the gods.

DOTP starts with a suitably digitised Egyptian still, sampled music and a choice of Pharaoh. Before you enter the eye of Horus your Pharaoh needs a province to rule over. Choose from a variety of locations whose names sound like diseases you wouldn't tell the vicar you had. Select your ship and you're on the way to true Pharaohdom.

On the main action screen you get a number of different options. The top section of the screen concentrates on trade and equipment building. Increase your fleet of ships, or your number of war chariots. Go boating up the Nile, check your supplies and trade. All of this is essential.

By using the options on the lower half of the screen you can have fun playing the tyrant. First off you have the war command. You can send one of your ndree drawn war chariots to brutalise a neighbouring tribe. This takes place in an arcade sequence with you controlling the speed of the chariot and the archer. Pressing the fire button releases an arrow which, hopefully, should leave a nasty hole in someone's head. While they're firing, you have to speed up or slow down to avoid the enemies' shots. A direct hit results in your chariot driver being hurled to the ground with wheel locks like a rather nasty chest wound. On the other hand if you survive to the end of the sector you become top dog over that tribe - until trouble starts up again.

"In the name of Horus the powerful and simply..."

Choose a god which appeals to you. In my case it was Hathor, God of Music and Happiness. You can build a temple to a god, or sacrifice the odd peasant or two. If you think it's necessary you can also build a temple for yourself (with the aid of a few thousand slaves).

As the game progresses your prestige increases as does your power and influence over your people and neighbouring tribesmen. Boost your powers until, finally, you're accepted by the gods themselves. A tall order indeed.

DOTP is one of those games that requires at least several hours per sitting. It's deep, absorbing and fun to play. The graphics are excellent, the sound is sparse but what's there is sampled and adds nicely to the atmosphere. A good game in the increasingly popular field of interactive strategy. A must for fans of style of game

CABAL

Here's a clever piece of marketing for you. Operation Wolf appears in the arcades and becomes an instant hit, so Ocean immediately rush out and buy the license. Then, Operation Thunderbolt appears and becomes an instant hit, so Ocean buy the rights to that too. In between these two appears another blood and guts game by the name of Cabal, and becomes the only serious rival to Op Wolf in the arcade. Hmm, think Ocean, how can we stop this from becoming a serious threat to Op Wolf on home computer? Easy, we buy that license as well.

And thus they did, and it came to pass that on the 6th day of the tenth month, that being the nineteen hundred and eighty-ninth year of our lord, a bundle of disks did weave their way into my hands, and from that did find a C64 with disk drive. Amen. And just to prove that there is power in prayer, the god Brace of Ocean declared that Cabal would be good, and so it came to pass it's bloody good.

The story is simple. As a one man army, you have to play a major part in the war against terrorism and fight your way through five levels of violence, blood and guts. Each level consists of four screens, all chok-a-blok with enemy soldiers, tanks, APCs, choppers, jets, the lot. And there's you, stood at the bottom of it all, taking pot shots at anything that moves.

As you run around at the bottom of the screen, a crosshair lies around the screen in line with your joystick movements, but four times faster than the main sprites. By holding down fire your man stops running and starts shooting, and the only thing that carries on moving is the crosshair. Even so, this doesn't stop the bad guys from firing at you, so the only real way to survive is to keep on moving, which is hard to do if you want to keep firing.

As you play each level, you'll find there are lots of things to destroy. The easiest to kill are the basic enemy soldiers who run on screen, take a shot, and then run off the other side of the screen.

Storm the fortress.

Ocean
Price:
£9.95 cass
£14.95 disk

Slightly more difficult are the grenade throwers, who, dressed in white, roll along the floor when you shoot at them, and take a couple of shots to kill. Then you have the tanks and APCs which roll but onto the screen, pause for a while and then launch high powered rockets. These take a lot of gunfire to destroy or a toss of a grenade — and both of these are limited. There are the airborne nestles such as the airplanes that bomb you, and the helicopter gunships that fly on, hover in the air and then strafe the ground. As well as all these, there are also bits of scenery that can be blown up. Bring this lot together and you've got a pratty destructive game.

The original arcade graphics weren't incredible, but Special FX have done a such a good job in converting the game that it now looks great. Everything moves around smoothly, and at high speed. Even when there is lots of stuff on screen and you're firing all the time, I've yet to find a spot at which the game slows down. All the sprites are well defined, even the titchy ones in the distance, and all are clear and recognisable.

The problem I did have with this is that there's no longer a simultaneous two player option. Nevertheless, it looks like this Christmas could belong to Ocean, as they release yet another great conversion.

Most computer games are violent. Some go over the top and (usually) they're to be taken with a pinch of salt. Dogs Of War however, is aggressive, bloodthirsty and great fun to play.

You are a mercenary and it's your job to go around the world using big guns and killing hundreds of people. The game starts with a map of the world displaying various locations, each one representing a mission. Each assignment varies in plot, it could be to recover stolen items, or to assassinate a political figure or to rescue a kidnap victim. You are offered a cash incentive of between five and fifteen thousand quid, payable in advance, just as well considering you need to buy your weapons before you set out.

The armoury gives a whiff of the slaughter to come. You are presented with a screen of guns, big guns and REALLY big guns, each one nastier than the last. At the bottom of the table you have a small Browning High Power pistol, which isn't the greatest stopper of massed hordes of Colombian drug barons. Further on you get the classic Uzi, followed by large violent machine guns, rocket launchers and flame throwers. Each costs a load of folding green ones, not to mention the price of ammunition.

DOGS OF WAR

objective now is to survive and take out as many people as you can.

Armoured vehicles, easy-to-pick-off footsoldiers, landmines and artillery — all of them give you hell. The armoured targets are safe from your bullets, so you need to use either a rocket launcher, a standard grenade or one of those fancy grenade launchers that can be slung on an M16 rifle.

Essentially nothing more than a Commando conversion, Dogs Of War does provide a great excuse for indiscriminate murder. Low on graphics, low on sound but good fun to play, it would have been nice to have seen a ten pound price tag attached to this game.

Mark Patterson.

XENOPHOBE

Way up in the Milky Way

You know things are going downhill when one of the leaders of original software licences a coin-op. Simulation masters Microprose have bowed to the public and released their first arcade conversion, Xenophobe. A strange choice for a licence considering that the coin-op wasn't all that hot. A bit stale as I remember.

So what better way to freshen it up than use a bit of originality, a touch of style and flair, or perhaps a whacking great bug. A steaming great bug. A bug so foul that it rides within the code during game testing, then leaps out at the unsuspecting punter and completely ruins his game by scrolling forever, rather than just scrolling from room to room. A sip in standards from Sealey and the boys, and one I hope only temporary.

But now to the game. You are an alien buster (for alien read 'ghost') and your mission is thus: travel to the alien infested space stations and wipe them out (the invaders that is, not the space stations!). As space stations go, these ones are quite small. Each one is made up of around a dozen rooms, and because it's circular, the map is wrap-around.

In one of the rooms there is a computer screen, and it's on this screen you monitor your progress via a percentage display. The more you kill, the lower the percentage.

The aliens come on-screen from both sides and are killed by simply shooting. The bigger the creature, the more hits it takes. Large ones rush you and knock you into other rooms, while small slime-like nasties grab onto your leg and drain your energy and have to be shook off. There are more, some of which do some really strange things, but I don't want to spoil the surprise for you.

As you go through the ships, you can pick up extra weapons, such as laser guns and smoke pellets, and food and bonus items such as jewellery, all of which you'll need if you want (a) a high score and (b) to complete the game.

The graphics aren't bad; basically they're a good copy of arcade graphics that weren't any good to start with. The backdrops are repetitive in places, and you do yearn for a greater range.

There are loads of tunes to be found within Xenophobe, along with a plethora of average sound effects, all very boom and chook.

It hurts me to say this. Xenophobe, just isn't any good. The controls are slow and there are a lot of moments when what should be a frantic shoot-em-up is nothing more than a tedious blast. That coupled with 'the bug' makes Xenophobe a bit of a bummer. Who'd have thought the day would come when I'd give a Microprose game a bad review? Doomeday is upon us.

Shuff out the fire, Tintin

It's taken years for a software company to show some sense in licensing probably the greatest comic character ever. Currently enjoying his 50th anniversary, celebrated in a wonderful exhibition during the summer in London, Tintin now makes his small screen debut.

Infogrammes have been working on Tintin On The Moon, based on the intrepid hero's troubled journey through the stars. It was published nearly 10 years before the real event and showed some remarkable foresight on the part of Herge as to the real problems of lunar flight—even if Tintin did find ice on the surface.

The possibilities for games design in this genre were enormous, but sadly Infogrammes have chosen to ignore most of them for a few rather little mini games. The beginning is promising with a neat opening sequence with some nice samples as the team are ferried to the rocket and take off. The game begins with a tedious phase in which you have to steer the rocket away from asteroids and into the path of energy capsules and red spheres.

TINTIN ON THE MOON

Once you've collected enough you move onto the second stage of the game which takes you inside the ship where Colonel Boris, the spy, has tied up Professor Calculus and Captain Had-dock and planted a bomb. First too begin to break out, and to complete the section you have to put them out, free your friends and discover the location of the bombs. Boris wanders uselessly around the ship, but if a Bomb you have to avoid. He'll shoot you, sapping your energy. Running through the fires too, will deplete it further. If you fail to extinguish the fires or find the bomb the ship blows up and the game ends.

If you manage to get through the second stage there's a shock in store—the game repeats these two sequences four more times before you have to land the rocket and complete the game. There are no further levels on the moon itself, thus wasting many excellent possibilities. Further game sections could have been added when Tintin has to rescue Snowy after he falls down a crevasse, or when the tank begins to run out of air as they return. In fact Tintin On The Moon could have been designed along Cinemaware lines. Instead an excellent opportunity to create a 16 bit interactive cartoon has been squandered.

The graphics are excellent too, which makes this all the more frustrating. The characters are readily identifiable and much of the game resembles Herge's style and his look.

It's sad once again to have to say that another great cartoon licence has been thrown away. Infogrammes, reportedly had memory problems, but if that's the case why didn't they make it a two disk game? I hope this doesn't deter them from taking on another Herge book—something like The Crab With The Golden Claws which offers many good opportunities—and doing a good job on it. I'm waiting.

A side-on approach to balloon snipping

BATMAN THE MOVIE

Swinging through the chemical factory

For the second time in a year Batman appears on the 64 through Ocean. This time riding on the wave of hype which swept across the Atlantic following the release of "Batman" the movie.

The first level is essentially the same on both formats. The graphics are clear cut and well drawn. The animation when Batman swings between platforms is very neat and helps improve the feel of the section.

Following on from there the first major change becomes apparent. The view on the driving stage is no longer from behind the vehicle, instead the game becomes a side-ways scrolling dodgem. Some 64 owners might feel cheated by this, believe me it's a whole lot better than attempting, and ultimately failing to reproduce the excellent driving sequence. As it stands it's still fun to play.

The 'match the cosmetics' section is as dull as ever, but it does help to balance the plot and game. Then on to stage, and believe me it's a lot harder than the Amiga version. For a start there appears to be a lot less room to manoeuvre to catch the balloons, and there's a lot more of them too. Then it's on to the cathedral to meet the Joker. Very similar to the first level, except a lot harder.

A really good game and a very well thought out conversion.

HIGH 125000

SCORE 1000000

No, I didn't buy the boxer shorts ($6.99), or read the comic books ($5.99). I didn't even see the film until September 11th and I wasn't remarkably impressed with that either. Give me the good old days any time, when Adam West was faced with Caesar Romero and an army of easily KO'd bad guys. Nowadays it's all these fancy gizmos and five million dollar pay packets. The Batman — The Movie game, however, is truly something special.

The first sequence of the game takes place in the Axis chemical plant with Batman battling Jack Napier (Jack Nicholson, $6,000,000). In case anybody didn't know, Jack Napier goes on to become the Joker and signs a lucrative deal for "Batman 2". Armed with an endless supply of Batarangs and the Bathook, Batman swings from platform to platform, often encouraging walls, pipes and bad guys in the process. But thanks to his body armour he can take quite a bit of damage. Among other hazards to lace are dripping acids, clouds of toxic fumes, machine gun armed villains and the green-coated sidekick with infinite supplies of anti-superhero grenades.

The next section is amazing. Batman is now behind the wheel of his Batmobile and is racing through the streets of Gotham City trying to avoid the police, who are chasing him with being a vigilante. This isn't just a straightforward driving game, you can turn corners as well. A handy arrow flashes up on the screen telling you there's a turn-off coming, and a quick tap of the fire button launches a grappling hook which connects with a lamp post and conveniently swings you around the bend. Miss too many turn-offs and you're guaranteed to run into a police road block. The most amazing thing about this sequence is the speed and quality of the graphics; they are far superior to anything you've seen on a home computer driving game, and it's hopeful Indicator as to what Ocean's Chase HQ might look like.

When Batman makes it back to the Batcave he then has to use the Batcomputer to work out which combination of tablets are being used to poison Gotham City's clean folk. Not a particularly interesting section, a bit like the photo-fit sequence in Robocop. Once he's done that it's back on the streets in his Batwing.

Similar to the excellent driving sequence, Batman has to pilot the Batwing down Gotham City's main highway trying to deactivate poison gas balloons. If you don't make the proper connection with the balloons you start to take damage, indicated by the wings burning.

The last section finds Batman going after the Joker in Gotham City cathedral. It's very similar to level one with plenty of platforms and bad guys to negotiate. And at the end, there's the final encounter with the Joker himself!

Batman — The Movie is a tremendous game, it follows the plot closely but doesn't sacrifice any gameplay. The graphics are of a high standard throughout and very well designed. The theme tune contains samples from the film and has a very funky feel to it. A highly playable and entertaining game.

AMIGA

SCENE

In the small of the chase! The whine of the woo-woos! The scream of the pedestrians who... hang on a minute, haven't I read this review somewhere before? Yes! Because in time honoured tradition, the Amiga version has appeared long after the G4 version, and also traditionally, is ten times better.

In as far as the game goes, it's the same, after all it is a conversion. If you didn't see the last issue, for some unknown reason, then here's a run down of the story. You are a cop, and as a cop you have various duties to fulfill, which usually consist of racing hell-for-leather across the busy streets of one of your typical US cities in search of a certain number of bad guys and crooks, the quota being laid down by your boss at the start of your day. Make it through the month, and you're a hero!

Crooks range from the cowardly litterbugs who give up at the slightest sound of a siren, through the honkers, yellow cabbies who constantly blaze their horns and take two bashers with the woo woos, right the way through to the dopers, who are as out of their heads they can't tell the difference between some woo-woos and a set of traffic lights. "Wow, man".

As you progress the bad guys get harder to find, harder to catch and there are more of them. To help combat the odds, there are lots of toys to collect such as improved engine, armour plating, enhanced brakes and most importantly, a gun which you can use in place of the woo-woos to get the bad guys from a distance.

The graphics are a massive

Freddy needs some persuading

APB

improvement over the G4 version with only one small gripe. The scrolling is still terrible. Jerky in all the 360 degrees it only really becomes unnoticeable at high speeds. The sprites themselves have been very well translated from the arcade, as have the backdrops, and I love the little incidental screens that have been thrown in here and there, for example, the confession screen.

After you have arrested an especially dangerous criminal, you have to get him to confess to their crimes, and this you do by beating it out of him. The screen is a picture of the door to your office, with a steamed window next to it. In the window are silhouettes of yourself and the criminal. By waggling the joystick, you throttle the perp who a confession meter slowly climbs. The object is to throttle the confession out of him before your chief gets to the door. I thought it was funny but I think Dirty Harry is a comedian.

The sound effects are brilliant. All of your cheifs "humpfs" and "ahhs" have been copied directly from the arcade, along with a bumbled "well done" and "thank-you-very-much" thrown in. All this plus a groovy soundtrack, great game effects and snatches of in-game speech with things like "I sure could use a doughnut" and "where's the gas station?".

An entertaining conversion of a great arcade game. By no means as good as it could have been, but still fun nonetheless. Worth buying.

KICK OFF

It's only now that the dark secrets of Kick Off on the Amiga can be revealed. Smashed computer cassettes, and promotional gimmicks, frayed tempers and fire-lancers torn limb from limb all bear testimony to the passions aroused by this game.

No real surprise then that we've been more than anxious to see how the 64 version was going to turn out. A couple of phone calls, a few pulled strings and one black disk later, and, I'm afraid to say, the results are totally disappointing.

The biggest difference is the game now scrolls horizontally rather than up and down, as we're all used to. The intelligence of the players has been reduced to that of lemon: it seems, instead of cunningly running into position, they tend to dawdle around doing their own thing. And it seems only fair to point out that they look a mess. The definition of the players is bad, blocky and unclear. The only thing that seems to have remained the same is the general game control.

Rather than utilise the standard kick and run techniques, Kick Off requires you to first trap the ball by holding down the fire button. Centre the joystick then steer the player to dribble, or release the button (with the stick held in the appropriate direction) to launch a shot or a cross. The demon slide tackle is still a formidable weapon in any player's arsenal, and you can instantly bring down the player who is in possession. Watch out, though, this move will almost certainly bring you an instant booking.

The gameplay is too slow for you to act like a speed demon. Instead a tactical approach is required, which sadly reduces the high pressure feel of its 16-bit cousin.

The colour of the pitch is garish, the sound is odd, and so are the graphics. The general gameplay appears to be in the same minor league too. Kick Off 64 is a game which deserves a badgit price. By all means take a look at it, but if you're expecting a good kick around give it a miss.

It's rare nowadays to find a piece of software that hasn't derived from a film or an arcade machine or for that fact plagiarised from another top selling title. In concept and design, Interphase can be claimed to be wholly original.

The plot behind Interphase is pretty complicated. Set sometime in the future the ultimate form of home leisure entertainment has been created, the DreamTracks. Fully interactive dreams where the player can not only see and hear what's going on but smell, feel and taste the action around them. In order to produce a top selling DreamTrack the companies have to record them from particularly vivid dreamers. In order to produce a perfect dream to tape the companies make their Dreamers attend seminars where they are fed constant information until the subject of the seminar occurs in their dreams.

One such Dreamer was Chadd. He had just had a major DreamTrack recorded when he was sacked. It wasn't until then that he realised the full potential of his dream, it could destabilise and undermine the minds of the youth of the western world.

The only thing left for Chadd to do is to attempt to break in to the DreamTrack Corporation high security building and destroy the MasterTrack for his dream. The idea is for his girlfriend to enter the building while Chadd plays havoc with the security systems within the main computer.

It sounds like a recipe for a shoot 'em up and that's what it is plus a strategy and arcade adventure. The game starts with Chadd gliding down a Powerdrome style tunnel following a strange bird, then the entrance to the level one computer appears. The first thing Chadd has to do is check the blue-prints for the level and identify all the hazards his girlfriend must face. On level one the first step is to deactivate one of the two cameras in the main corridor. Take out the wrong one and the security droid will be activated too soon and catch Chadd's girlfriend, take out both and — beware — the robot will be left in the room she has to pass through.

The primary way of switching objects on and off or to open and close things is to destroy the you can use your tractor beam to carry a replacement part to the deactivated (denoted by a wire frame graphic) original. On later levels some components can be docked with and switched internally, these tend to be objects with more than an on/off function.

The goal for each level is for Chadd to guide his girlfriend safely to the lift and up to the next level. There are twelve levels in total with each one being broken up into several floors containing the relevant components. Unfortunately for Chadd the computer doesn't take kindly to having people blasting its circuits wily nilly, the resulting defence mechanisms manifest themselves as birds, helicopters and planes, none quite as nice as the overall favourite though the uncycling frog. Most can be destroyed with Chadd's lasers but quickly reappear from the various generators around the landscape. Just as well Chadd brought along some quirky missiles isn't it?

A huge, deeply absorbing interactive game which is a welcome relief. Interphase formally Mantreme has been over a year in development, but it's well worth the wait.

PICTIONARY

Since the demise of Trivial Pursuit, everyone's favourite after hours board game is Pictionary.

What you do is come back home from the pub with your mates, steaming drunk, get out the game and get more drunk whilst you fall about laughing at everyone's pathetic attempts at sketching Monet's 'View From Tower Bridge' or a banana. Well, by that time you can't tell the difference.

The idea behind Pictionary for those of you who never do those kind of things, is to move your counters round a board to the finish before anyone else. What a great game concept! But hang on there's more... You move by having the rest of your team guess what a doodle — spotted by the square and a card — you've drawn is. There's a time limit so higher arts degree students can't produce charcoal, gouache or litho prints. It's all quite a laugh because generally, in the time you're given, most people's drawings are crap.

The problem with most board games is that when they're translated to the screen they lose much of their spontaneity. Pictionary, sadly, is no exception. You are given a nice box to keep the game in, laminated, colour question cards and are then expected to draw everything on the screen. If you don't split into teams (the game accommodates as many as six individuals) you don't get to draw anything at all — the computer does it. When the game is played this way it rapidly degenerates into a first-to-the-space-bar guessing game. Naturally the computer draws accurately so there's no fun to be had there.

When played in teams at least an element of human fallibility creeps in. You have to draw the picture on what is effectively a basic art package. Various options offer you the ability to draw painfully slow work.

Pictionary then makes little sense in translation to the computer, especially when you consider that the Amiga version costs marginally more than the board game itself. Sorry Domerk, but no way can I recommend that.

SUMMER EDITION

The latest in Epyx's now slightly tired athletic sims to appear on the Amiga is linked to the long forgotten Seoul Olympics, which is a shame because it's an improvement on their recent releases.

The Games Summer Edition allows you to compete in eight events: archery, cycling, the pole vault, the rings, the pommel horse, the hammer and the 400m hurdles.

You may practice any event before bidding for gold against the computer or friends. Each player chooses which country to represent and then proceeds to the game. Several of the events are standard woggle type games but some require careful practice with the joystick before progress can be made.

Graphics are extremely varied due to the different events and are always to an exceptionally high standard. Animation is beautifully smooth and there's plenty of it too. There are some nice graphic touches too, as in the archery event, when a mole appears cursing in Korean if you bury an arrow in the ground. Sound is also good, and although spot effects are occasionally a little lacking, the myriad of excellent tunes more than makes up for this.

Zing, zlog, zlog went the arrow.

Epyx have introduced new twists to some events that set The Games Summer Edition out from the rest. For example, in the hurdles and cycling the track moves relative to your athlete (rather than the other way round) by use of some excellent 3D routines.

Sensible control systems make it easy to get into the game straight away but cleverly designed events mean that much practice will be required.

The little touches of humour and style are present as in all Epyx games and they really do help to keep the player hooked until you can boast absolute perfection.

One gripe is that the program is on two disks and it doesn't reorg use the second disk drive which means that a reasonable amount of disk swapping is required, nevertheless Games Summer

LASER SQUAD

When the original 64 version of Laser Squad was released in March this year it received a more-than-healthy 92% and entered the CU hall of fame. The April deadline for the Amiga version came and passed and little has been heard since then. Until a new software outfit by the name of Blade announced Blasting a guy in.

their forthcoming Amiga release — Laser Squad

— it was its simplicity which made Laser Squad such a successful game. The graphics are workmanlike, as is the sound, but the concept and the execution are exceptional. You are in charge of the crack Laser Squad and you have a number of missions to complete, whether they involve assassinating a drugs baron, laying siege to a major office block or rescuing buddies held prisoner in a mining complex.

At the start of each mission it's your responsibility to equip your team. There are various types of armour to choose from and a large selection of weapons and ammunition. At one end of the scale is the Mersec Auto Pistol which is very low powered and cannot penetrate tough armour whilst at the other is the rocket launcher which can take out just about anything.

The deployment phase is next. Your troops need to be placed in set locations by the entrances to the map.

Each troop has a set number of Action Points which diminish with every action, even if you drop an object. If a player ends a turn with more than half of his total Action Points he automatically goes into opportunity mode (that is to say if the enemy passes his field of vision he gets what is effectively a free strike so long as he's quick).

Essentially, Amiga Laser Squad has from some improved graphics and its extremely atmospheric sound effects is identical to the 8-bit game. One final improvement has been to include the two original 8-bit expansion packs in the 16-bit version. No actual expansion packs are planned for this version.

Laser Squad is excellent, although I can't help but feel slightly put out by the lack of improvement to the original. But if you're somebody who likes the idea of plenty of over-the-top violence, explosions and some thinking you won't go far wrong with this little baby.

WORDS OF TWILIGHT

The dragon which guards the gate

Swords of Twilight's instruction manual promises quite a lot. It's not just a game, it seems. It offers you "freedom of action in a world of wonder... short of first degree burns, this is as close as you can get to a dragon's breath or a wizard's fireball." Sounds pretty amazing, doesn't it? But what you actually end up with is a slow version of Gauntlet mixed with a poor clone of Times Of Lore.

As usual, an evil force has taken over the land. You are the only one who can save the world from its dark oppressors — that is you and two other brave warriors both of whom can be controlled by computer or another player. Characters are chosen from a cast list of thirty one warriors, all with different strengths and abilities. It's down to you to find a successful mix that will enable you to have both the physical strength to endure the wilderness, and the mental agility to overcome the obstacles and puzzles.

The game is played as a top view eight-way scroller. In three of the four corners of the screen are the pictures of the three characters in the adventure plus any relevant information. In the fourth corner is a picture of any other characters in the area. It's by using these windows that all the clever manipulation takes place. Pressing fire brings up a short menu, which in turn leads to others. You can move objects around, talk to people and change your temperament from friendly, to wary or hostile. If hostile, you can fight anything that moves. But the real problem with remaining hostile is that not only do bad guys tend to attack you more often, but sensibly enough, your own party spends a lot of time avoiding you.

Talking to people seems to be the real key to success in this game, but having said that I couldn't help but feel disappointed with the quality of dialogue. Each conversation consists of the bad guys asking who you are, and then you say something like "I am Nobbin, son of Dobbin, and I am here to right wrongs, can you help us?" The bad guys refuse and then they depart. This is massively time consuming and adds to the problems caused by the loading system which seems to load these characters up for no reason at all and then spends ages working out what to do with them. It's all so repetitive and makes the game very dull indeed.

The backdrops are samey and created from a limited set of blocks, the main sprites are usually unvaried, they just vary slightly different in colour. The scrolling is slow and jerky and a lot of objects are far from recognisable. The only graphic I found even remotely impressive was the large dragon that guards the gate to the next country.

There is a terrible tune that plays at the start and one or two spot effects; but on the whole the sound is poor. Considering that it doesn't look as if they used too much memory on the graphics, you would have thought they could have used a little bit more on the sound.

On the whole an uninspired RPG that's too simple to satisfy true role players and too dull to entice arcadesters.

ment of one from a mining colony on one planet, and drop the shipment off at another. Simple, only I didn't reckon on being set upon by a gang of pirates while approaching the starbase I got a couple of shots in before they completely obliterated me.

And that's what this game is all about. Action, adventure and more battles than you could possibly imagine. Of course, it's just as full of options and different weapons as you'd expect an SSI product to be, and more besides. There are 16 types of human armour, 54 different weapons, 9 different types of starships, dozens of different weapons for your ship and loads more besides. It represents total heaven for an unbalanced lunatic like Mark Patterson. Sadly, the graphics aren't brilliant. They're restricted to small single colour sprites and lots of text windows. However, what's lost in aesthetics is more than made up for by the wealth of information at your fingertips. All controls are single keypresses picked from an on-screen menu. The sound is pretty limited too, the game a chial effect being a very clear impersonation of a digital alarm clock. Nevertheless there's already a degree of disk swapping involved. The inclusion of graphic and sonic trials would have meant at least a third disk.

The Triangle may not push the Amiga to its limits, but it has a level of gameplay and depth most conversions and licences can only dream of.

STAR COMMAND

The recent spate of SSI games, bar the AD&D licenses have been a little samey, so it was with some trepidation that I loaded Star Command, the game that promised to be everything I've been looking for. I can honestly say that after a dozen or so hours of constant play that it is not only one of the best games SSI have ever programmed, it's also one of the best I have ever played.

You, as Commander of eight sturdy young men and women must take on the known universe and most of the unknown one as you battle to save The Triangle. The Triangle, by the way is the new human home. The old one, originally known as the Earth, was blown away by marauding pirates out looking for some fun.

The Triangle is so called because of its three protective starbases. Within the Triangle is the only known place in the galaxy where any form of law and order exists. Outside pirates roam wild in small groups. They've never formally formed much of a threat. Until now.

A particularly nasty pirate by the name of Blackbeard has rounded together as many pirates as he can get his hands on and is now planning the first ever major assault on The Triangle. You must win the massive war that threatens to erupt at any moment.

But not yet. For now you must be satisfied with more menial tasks, yet even the simplest of jobs is fraught with danger. Take the first job for example. It seemed simple enough, just collect a shiprious types of warriors and scholars, each one excelling in his own particular field.

Once you're inside the fortress the name of the game, quite simply, is violence. Run into the fortresses do a bit of GBH, then try to find the clues and the equipment to get you through to the next level. Your antics make the game seem silly. When you search for objects you have to scale walls unaided, which makes you look like Spiderman.

You've got quite a lot to collect — pieces of armour, weapons, coins, keys, even ingredients for magic potions. Most items serve a very useful purpose: a wand will open chest and will give you a clue as to how to find the entrance to the next level, armoured vests give you all-round protection.

If the unthinkable should happen and you're killed you are thrown out of the fortress minus all of the objects you collected.

Instead of the standard forfeit of a life, you age by the number of months it took you to heal. The older and mankier your character gets the more time he has to spend in training (rather than fighting, until finally, you're old and wizened).

What Bushido lacks in graphics and sound it makes up for in action and puzzleability. Especially, its the puzzles which help break the monotony on what might have been a tedious old 'em all game.

A fun offering from Micropose, especially for the games player who doesn't like his games to be too intellectual.

Bushido arrives at a time when the 64 is starved of software. Gone are the bad old days when companies — both reputable and rogue — were turning out games by the dozen, leading to the most bizarre variation in ratings ever seen. The recess in the 64 market has provided scope for individual games to stand up to scrutiny.

Bushido takes you back to a Sonyless Japan where warlords (Daimyo) battle for supremacy. Once such warrior has entrenched himself inside a huge fortress in order to escape assassination. All attacks on the fortress have so far failed, so a rival warlord has decided to penetrate it with a lone warrior.

You select the character you want to do this mission. A monk might be well versed in martial arts, but when it comes to stealth or handling a sword he could end up doing more harm to himself than to others. On the other hand, a well armed Samurai is more than a match for anyone. Other characters include Ninjas and va-

Speedboat Assassin is one of the first in a new range of budget games that promises you the cheapest, quality 16-bit software this side of a CU coverdisk. To be honest, I think they've blown it already, because this is a pile of crap right from the word go, apart from some rather natty scrolling.

Played in the vein of Live and Let Die, you pilot a speedboat through a rapidly approaching barrage of mines, missile firing towers and enemy speedboats. To begin with you're unarmed but as you emerge into New York harbour you're greeted by a friendly helicopter, which ever so kindly leaves you a gun. Sadly, after that the game gets really tedious.

As I've said, the scrolling is fast and smooth, and some of the sprites are huge, but the 3D update is pretty average, and the collision detection is appalling. The sound is dull and the game is one big yawn from start to finish. That still makes it poor value for a fiver. (38%)

CHEAPO OF THE MONTH

SORCERY PLUS

16 Blitz
Amiga

Now this has to be worth a fiver of anyone's money Sorcery Plus is a 16-bit conversion of an old 8-bit classic. When the original was released it instantly became a cult classic in this building.

This is an arcade adventure along traditional lines. Rush around picking up and dropping items in a desperate attempt to unlock the wizards imprisoned behind doors around a maze of screens. If you want to know where Ratale Cecco got the inspiration for Shanlord take a look at this Sorcery Plus has neat, if minimal graphics, atmospheric sound and it's totally addictive. UPDATE

NEWS

We're road-bound, space-bound and going underground in this month's update. There's news of the 8-bit versions of two excellent Amiga games, plus a review of a newbie from Dinamic.

OIL IMPERIUM

C64/128

According to new boy Mark Mainwood, Amiga Oil Imperium was a "real winner that will have you hooked for weeks", and just to back that up, he gave it 85% and a screenstar. The 64 version is not just similar to the Amiga, it's as perfect a copy as you could get, both graphically and in gameplay.

As before, you play an oil tycoon millionaire type, just starting off in the business along with three other companies (human or computer owned), and it's from this point that you begin the long, perilous climb to success through buying oilfields, drilling them and burning down your opponent's oilfields. It's all in the name of fun.

Graphically, the only differences are the slightly lower resolution and colour palette, and on the computer, the Amiga monitor has been replaced by a Commodore 1701.

A perfect conversion, if not actually better than the Amiga. A message to all 64 owners: You lucky, lucky people.

MASTER GRAND PRIX

Dinamic

C64/128

MGP is a very fast, very frantic top view motorcycle race game that allows you to compete in the World GP, endorsed by none other than Jorge Martinez 'Aspar'. With that sort of game description, you have to sit down and think: Why haven't I heard any hype about a game that sounds this good? The answer is simple, it's pretty useless.

First things first. Regarding the speed of the game, it is far too fast. When you race at top wheel, and believe me you have to, you crash into a corner before you realise what's happened. Naturally, before you can race, you have to qualify. This is where the game falls apart, it is almost impossible to do so. The fastest time you can get without crashing and steying on the road for the whole course is always at least ten seconds — and you're only allotted that, so no race Amiga.

The graphics aren't bad, the scrolling is smooth and there are some nice effects. It is just a shame the terrible design means that you haven't a hope in hell of ever seeing the race, let alone another bike.

Activision

The plot for Wicked is simple

Good and Evil are battling for supremacy throughout the twelve constellations. In order to take control of a constellation the area needs to be free of the enemy's spores. This is accomplished by shooting the bad growths then collecting seeds and placing them in gaps on the screen in order to promote growth.

You don't get a running scoreline, but the character who has the upper hand is placed in the centre of the screen — a sun for good and a bloated blue face for evil. All of this and more has been retained from the Amiga version.

The graphics are fantastic, the sound is great. More important, the overall feel of the game has been converted perfectly. A faultless game which goes to show what can be done with a 64

CU LETTERS

Maturity

● I'm writing this letter to bring some ideas to your attention.

But firstly I must say that you've done a fine job on maintaining an excellent computer magazine, but maturing at the same time. And luckily you haven't taken the 'baby trail' like some other magazines, where all readers are treated like four-year-olds.

Now, my first suggestion is the possibility of bringing out a collection of tips, say once a year, from the recent issues, bundling in a few more, and releasing it as a separate publication, in other words, not a poncey little thing collapsed to the front of the mag.

Secondly, how about a helpline like the current, except only dealing in adventures? That would nicely complement Valley Rescue.

Finally, how about some more special articles. I disagree with people who want computer reviews and nothing else, for that makes a dull and quick read. The recent articles on special effects and jukeboxes really have nothing to do with computers but make a good read.

Sam Gibson,
52a North Deeside Road,
Culter, Aberdeen

Thanks for the compliments. A full tips booklet would be a nice idea, but to produce it separately would simply be too expensive and difficult to promote. There is a possibility of it happening as a supplement, though. We believe the features, as you point out, give the mag greater depth, but we do disagree that they have nothing to do with computers. The gap between comics, film and music is closing all the time.

Handy tips

● I recently discovered a couple of useful tips that you might like to pass on to your readers. If you have problems with the buttons on your mouse, try opening the case and putting a small piece of card (about 1mm in thickness), cut to the approximate size of the silver contacts, on the leaf contacts (I think that's their proper name), then replace the screws.

What happens in most cases is that the upper leaf will become indented from where the point of the button is continually pressing down on it, and ceases to operate correctly. Placing a small thin piece of card on the upper leaf contact ensures that instead of just a single point of the upper leaf being pushed on to the lower leaf, all of it is.

Tip 2. Recently I purchased some of those 'lifetime guaranteed unbranded' disks, only to find that some 50% of them came up with read/write errors when I tried to format them. Diskdoctoring also produced the same result. Then as a last resort I tried the Diskwipe (martino found on the Project D utility followed by Diskdoctor and they all formatted without a problem, thus saving me the cost and hassle of returning them to the supplier. Whether this was just something peculiar to my disks and A500 I'm not sure but it may worth passing on. V. Kirby, 15 Trenchard Close,

Stammore, Midx

Has anyone else got any useful tips? Like how to get stains out of your disk mat, or stop dual from fouling your monitor screen?

Smart arse

● With reference to your 'motorcycle enthusiasts' and the RVF Honda as featured in The Last Word September '89 issue, I would like to point out that the Honda 750 RVF does exist. This machine is exclusively a works bike only available to 'factory' riders.

Also, the bike pictured in the advert is a VFR, being the VFR 750R (also called HC30). This bike is a road/race replica of the RVF, costs £9,000 and is available in limited numbers. A VTR 750R is also manufactured by Honda, this being a mass produced model, is not a race replica, and costs £4,000. Sorry about being a clever dick, but you may as well have the facts.

S. White,
16 Hatfield Gardens,
West Monkseaton,
Whitley Bay,
Tyne & Wear

Just goes to show doesn't it? The Ed has kicked The Last Word very hard in the goggles for not bothering to check its tip-offs. Apologies to Microstyle and all those who wrote in putting us straight.

German mags

● After a long period of CU-less time I brought your mag again. With interest I read the letter of Simon Parkinson. It's worth knowing the differences to our German mags.

The main ones are 'Power Play and ASM'. In both you'll get many clues and tips for adventure, action games, game-machines and especially RPGs. None of them beat your 'Play to Win' column though. PP is relatively serious and very clear in its layout. ASM seems to be a little chaotic. They throw away their equivalent of Screen Stars in mazes. PP's ratings are very good and are discussed each time. ASM tends to say things are either fabulous or awful. Yours are very good, too. Lastability is a unique feature. Not to be missed.

The best thing about CU is the colourful layout. It is an experience to study the reviews with bright screenshots. You really get an idea of what's going on. Journey onward this path and you'll hold your German readers.

Thomas G. Joavig, Nuerenberg,
Germany

here's no end to Keith Campbell's stamina. This month's Valley zips around the world (in somewhat less than eighty days) to bring you news of foreign software, a weather report from Bournemouth and does battle with the Smart Eggs. And, of course, there's much, much more.

PLANETFALL

Come in Rolf Hay and Jens Koller! Here's help specially for you, all the way from Abu Dhabi! Asif Hassan says that you can't open the mural — but don't worry about it, all will be revealed when the time comes. Floyd is supposed to die, and there is no way into the radiation lab without dying. That was help? Guess you're back to square one, but at least you can give up trying on those particular problems. But Asif does have a more useful tip for you, too! Try setting the laser on a lower number. And as an extra hint, Asif adds, "the giant microbe is attracted to the heat of the laser".

STARCROSS

Here's Asif Hassan again, with some Starcross hints, requested in September's Valley. The disks are transporter devices, and the unicorn is just scenery. The observatory does have a use, but you need a piece of smoked glass first. "Have you ever followed the cleaning mouse around?" asks Asif. "The green rod is in the room that it goes to when it drops off the garbage. And the purple rod is up the sleeve of the dead alien in the wrecked spaceship." How you manage to get it, of course, is another problem.

SPACE QUEST I

And here's a warning to Chris Thompson, who was recently trying to discover the code for the star generator in Space Quest I. "If you don't have it, you may have to restart the game." Guess what? It's the ubiquitous Asif here again! "You have to go to the tape library in the ship at the beginning of the game," says Asif. "A scientist will stagger in and tell you a word, which you must then look up! But whatever you do, don't do it in the ship," he adds. "There is a tape reader elsewhere that will give you the code."

CASTLE BLACKSTAH

Mrs Cornish of Heading wants to go for a ride on a broomstick! Who can tell her how to make it fly?

PERSONAL NIGHTMARE

"I'm beginning to get quite frustrated with Personal Nightmare," writes Dennis Janssen from Amsterdam. "I've played this game almost every day for six weeks, and I have the feeling I've accomplished almost nothing." Dennis's main problem is an army of tin soldiers that keep shooting him. "The obvious way to prevent this is to destroy them before you go to bed, but I can't get the glass case open," explains Dennis.

THE BIG SLEAZE

"What do the two guys at the police station want, and what should I give or show the policeman?", asks Mitch Poonifire of Stockport. Mitch is also wondering when he should load Part 3. Don't forget — there's help down here in The Valley, just waiting to come to your rescue! The Valley is a depression deeper than Marvin, at Commodore (see, Priory Court, 30-32 Farringdon Lane, London EC1R 3AU). There will be a reply dropping through your letter box, just as soon as I can sort things out for you. So get writing!

COMMENT

Adventurers disappointed by the dearth of good new adventures around these days, may be interested to learn that there are games out there that haven't seen the light of day in the UK. I came by a couple of Amiga disks recently, from a source in Italy, containing an American adventure with the unlikely name: Scary Mutant Space Aliens From Mars. The game was a pirated copy of what appears to be a commercial product — containing the classic credits, "Password Protection removed by Vision Factory & The Beyonders", and "Spreaded in Italy by FPL INC."

It was just beginning to enjoy the game's over the top spoof scariness, "... The side of the ship cracks open and a boarding ramp extends itself to the ground. A strange yellow light is emanating from inside the ship. The whole scene is pretty scary." When I came up against an apparently insuperable problem — I couldn't find the code (37 digits? But that's longer than the input field . . .) to log in to the alien ship's computer. This is also the problem facing Alessandro Cattaneo of Gallarate, also in Italy. I don't know whether or not Alessandro's is a plated copy too, but the thought strikes me that the clue might be buried in the packaging, of which I do not have the benefit of owning.

INTO THE

No doubt the answer to this and other problems will emerge eventually, packaged or no packaging. All I can say is that it is a pity that Readysoft Inc., producers of Scary Mutants, have not released their game in the UK and other European countries. I would have welcomed an opportunity to review it. A game of this calibre is bound to lend itself to piracy if it cannot legitimately be purchased.

So there! Now, what have you all been up to this month? Here's an adventure that should have been exported — every single copy of it ever made . . .

* I hope you can help me (seeing as I've got the same surname as you). I'm stuck in Not A Penny More etc. I got it for £3 but I didn't get a book. I cannot get anywhere, only to the residential homes. Also if you've got a spare book could I have it, please?

Tom Campbell,
Barlow, N. Yorkshire.

Campbell's Comment: No, you can't. Grandad. And I'm doing you a favour saying that! As for the game, throwing it away would probably be too good for it. I suggest you take it to where you bought it, put it on the ground, and jump up and down on it. It's even worse than Mindfighter, and that's saying something. Why on earth did you buy it — don't you ever read my reviews?

Now witness some low down grovelling . . .

* Here's an apology. When I last wrote to you I said you had published a clue for Fish straight from the hint section from the booklet. This 'hint' appeared in another magazine, so sorry about that!

Helen Moore,
Auckland, New Zealand.

Campbell's Comment: It's against my religion to talk to readers of other magazines, but as it's not Sunday today, I'll make an exception! So here's another dp. Stick to CU in future!

Oh no! What's this? Not another solution to that basement problem.

* In Nigel's Revenge I believe the true solution to the 'basement' problem is not as M Ferris (CU June 89) says to put everything through the window one by one! This is tedious, and I am sure was not intended by the programmers to be the proper solution. The easiest way, and the one I believe to be right, is to DROP ALL, and then PUT ALL THROUGH WINDOW. This is a lot easier and quicker!

Aitch Pongret, Bramhall, Stockport.

Campbell's Comment: It might be, but I still prefer the fun solution . . . So I phoned Smart Egg on their latest number, to settle the matter once and for all. "Is that Nigel?" I asked. "No it isn't," answered a helpful fellow at the other end. "Is Nigel around?" I continued, with determination. "Dunno!" came the response, and with that he put the phone down. Charming!

And finally, how are those sunbathers doing down in Bournemouth?

* Down here in beautiful Bournemouth the sun is no longer shining, the surfers surf no more, and it passes down with rain all day. The holidaymakers have been renamed to hammorrhoids because they are a pain in the arse and always come in groups.

We, the intrepid explorers of Bournemouth, have become intrepidly stuck again. This time on Arazok's tomb. There are a few things we're unable to accomplish!

1. Get into the transporter tube
2. Use the Vicro Screen
3. Kill the snake

Hope you can help up or we will have to stay in all day and see who will be the first to fall asleep on Elite.

Dan Stride,
Somerset, Dorset.

Campbell's Comment: Along the coast not a million miles from Hove (Brighton, actually) mowers have started mowing again, but hoses haven't been allowed to hose. With the holidaymakers gone, we hope soon to have a little Ho! for a while, before it's all sold off. Er, what was the question again?

ADVENTURE CLUES

QUEST FOR THE GOLDEN EGGCUP:

Release the caged bird to get rid of the Guardian.

POOL OF RADIANCE:

To clear the Barren River, use the teleports, and throw three rocks, keep doing this until you get to an L-shaped corridor. Then, go to the teleport in the front, and do it again. Go through the door, and destroy all the equipment — but don't kill the Lizardman.

QUEST FOR THE GOLDEN EGGCUP:

Wave the wand to cross the crevasse.

THE BIG SLEAZE:

"It's not easy being a ghost. To start with, picking things up is extremely difficult, and even when you master the art, most everyday objects are just too heavy to lift. But it has its compensations. The company is great, for one thing. Well, at least, the lot in my cemetery are. Violet has stopped moaning, and Edith has stopped worrying. David's still a bit of a show-off, but I can put up with that now I've proved my worth. Once I'd sorted out the row between Bert and Edna, a couple 're-united in death', I found they'd do anything to help me.

"By the way, I'm Alan Chance, ex-cop. The 'ex' is because I was set up and murdered during a drugs raid. Now that I'm deceased I know who was behind it — he gave himself away at my funeral when he didn't realise I was watching! Now all I've got to do is get my kindred spirits to help me to make sure he gets his just deserts, and clear my name."

Scapeghost, sadly, marks the end of an era. It is not only the latest, but the last ever traditional adventure from Level 9, who are moving on into the world of 'arcade oriented' products.

The usual Level 9 high-level commands are supported, such as GOTO, UNDO and RAM SAVE. The graphics are of the pull-down type, and with Level 9's multi-tasking system, the prompt often returns before a new picture has displayed, speeding up the action. The artwork is rather low-key, and disappointingly less exciting than the standard achieved in Hybrid's Back.

But an adventure is nothing if its puzzles do not satisfy and entertain. In part 1 of Scapeghost, they're nicely pitched. First there's a learning phase, in which the player has to come to terms with his new 'body' and learn how to carry objects as an insubstantial ghost. Next comes a recruiting phase, where the player needs to persuade his fellow ghosts to carry out his commands. Here clever use is made of 'WAIT n' when speaking to other characters (where 'n' is a number of moves) in order to ensure their efforts are co-ordinated. All this is necessary before the final problem in Part 1 can be cracked, which is to delay the gangsters from recovering the drugs.

I found the whole part very playable, making extensive use of GOTO and RUN TO to move automatically across the cemetery. There are some gentle clues in the replies, which avoid leaving the player high and dry without any idea of what to do next.

Having delayed the gang's plans in part 1, in part 2 you'll be concentrating on collecting clues to aid the police, whilst finally, in part three, you'll have to rescue a hostage and prevent the gang from destroying evidence.

This novel story line comes from an idea by Sandra Sharkey and Pete Gerzard, and with Pete Austin's design and the Level 9 adventure system, combines to make a very original adventure which is enjoyable to play. It is all the more of a disappointment to learn that Scapeghost is the end of the line. Think again, Level 9! When you are rich from the best pickings of the arcade world, please find time in your schedule to throw the occasional crumb to those loyal adventure fans who helped you make it.

How to use the Helpline

It's easy. Just send in your letter, marking your envelope with the appropriate code number if you are sending a response. Post your letters to Play to Win Helpline, CU, Priory Court, 30-32 Farningdon Lane, London EC1R 3AU. Oh, and if you're making an enquiry, just write a couple of lines explaining the particular problem, ie why you need a pake, why you would like a particular listing.

The sender of each letter published will get a free piece of software. This month's winners will be getting an Amiga or 64 copy of Shinobi (specify drive).

Next month will see another goodie up for grabs. Sorry, but we're unable to respond to individual requests for games.

If you are replying to any of these enquiries don't forget to mark your letter with the reference code for the person you are responding to. If you send in more than one enquiry, please put each on a separate sheet of paper. Likewise, if you send in a response but have an enquiry too. That way we can file everything in neat alphabetical files.

PLAY TO WIN POKES

If you're thinking of submitting material to Play To Win try to follow these guidelines.

1. All pokes need to be clearly written and accompanied with instructions (preferably for new games);
2. Tips need to be concise and to the point;
3. Maps need not feature complicated artwork as long as they are clear and self explanatory.

There will be a software prize for anything printed.

Send all submissions to:

Play To Win, Commodore User, 34 Abbots Court, Farrington Lane, London, EC1R 3AU

KINGDOMS of ENGLAND

Start by setting your borders which flag you choose as the kingdoms are placed at random locations on the map. If you find yourself placed in northern England or Scotland it's wise to restart the game. The ideal location is in the southwest around Cornwall or Devon, or in the Somerset region, Kent and Essex. The purpose behind this relates to the higher taxation brackets imposed on the richer southern counties, helping you to get a richer start.

The early turns are nothing more than a mass scramble for land, you're not in much danger of being attacked here as nobody has a sufficiently strong army. The best strategy is to call up solitary foot soldiers and march them into neighbouring territories. Spend the money on building up the castle army.

After a while you'll find that you've got a few territories. Now it's

PLAY TO WIN TIPS

As with most things, getting off to a good start is important, this influences your performance for the rest of the game. It's important to create a strong party and an even stronger main character as early as possible. Not an easy task.

First sort out the priorities for your character. These should be collecting food and money, with weapons and a starting team coming later. Go around level A recruiting anybody you meet. If they're not too proficient take all of their equipment then discard them. When you have managed to fill your bag, empty it and leave all the equipment by the entrance to dungeon B.

If you do recruit an above average character take him to one of the bedrooms, discard him, walk out and lock the door, trapping him inside. Keep repeating this until you have as much equipment as you need.

When you have a number of good characters locked in a room go inside and choose the best two spades and the best two clubs. Equip your men as best you can then place the spades of the front of the group and the clubs at the back.

If you find yourself up against a far superior foe during a battle do not be afraid to run. Go straight to a bedroom and lock the door otherwise the monster(s) will follow you in. Once inside, rest and prepare a plan of action. There's every chance that the monster will have left, but it's better to be safe than sorry.

Apart from all the puzzle solving and combat, one other hazard faces your party — getting stuck behind objects. Owing to the perspective view of the characters it's very easy to get confused. The best solution if this happens is to back track five or six moves or refer to the map to work out which direction you should be facing.

By the year 2001, the primitive computer-generated 3D worlds that came to be used in will look as modern as a Singer sewing machine, the fact you'll be able to measure yourself in an artificial world of strangely misfollowing proportions. That's the view of a team of people currently making strides in the crucible of Virtual Reality. Mark Halsey looks through the glass to Intel@.com.

BECOMING THE BIONIC ANGEL

When you think of bionics, you probably think of a prosthetic limb or a hearing aid. But bionics is much more than that. It's the science of combining living organisms with machines. It's the art of creating artificial life. It's the quest for a better way to live. It's the dream of a bionic man. It's the reality of a bionic woman. It's the future of humanity. It's the end of the beginning. It's the start of the end. It's the middle of the world. It's the heart of the matter. It's the soul of the machine. It's the mind of the man. It's the body of the woman. It's the spirit of the bionic angel.

...the world of bionics is a world of possibilities. It's a world where the impossible becomes possible. It's a world where the boundaries between the natural and the artificial are blurred. It's a world where the human and the machine are no longer separate entities, but a single, unified whole. It's a world where the bionic angel is not just a dream, but a reality. It's a world where the future is now. It's a world where the bionic angel is the key to a better tomorrow. It's a world where the bionic angel is the light at the end of the tunnel. It's a world where the bionic angel is the answer to all our questions. It's a world where the bionic angel is the future of humanity. It's a world where the bionic angel is the end of the beginning. Mondo 2000 is the latest incarnation of a magazine which has been variously called Reality Hackers and High Frontiers. Available only directly from the US, it is THE magazine for anyone into virtual reality, hacking, nanotechnology, artificial intelligence, pirate TV — or anything cyberpunk. Issue 7 features interviews with William Gibson, Rudy Rucker, St. Silicon, high priest of C.H.I.P. (the Church Of Heuristic Information Processing), veteran hackers and much more. Published quarterly by Fun City MegaMedia and edited by R.U. Sirius, you can reach them at MONDO 2000, PO Box 10171, Berkeley, CA 94709-5171, FAX: 415-649-9630, Appielink: D5574, MCI Mail: MONDO 2000. Each issue is $7 airmail and their Credit card Hotline (Vias and Mastercard) is 415-645-9618.

Do you already own an Amiga computer?
 If not, which one do you want?

Cyberspace is no longer a frontier.

own in which you can totally immerse yourself. It's a technology that has actually been under development since the Sixties, but it is really the advances in the individual components in the last five years that have made it a practical possibility. NASA have pioneered most of the work behind the basic set-up, but now special effects studios, movie and computer companies are all getting involved. Lucasfilm's David Levine has already developed the first cyberspace game, a variation on Ball Blazer—a sort of squash game which is played by the cybernaut in an alternative universe where the rules of mechanics and gravity are similar, but slightly different. The result is a disorientating, high speed and distinctly strange game. Ball Blazer only touches, however, on the farthest tip of the virtual reality iceberg. Industrial Light & Magic have several groundbreaking projects in the works and the software pioneers Autodesk have put together a 'cyberspace initiative team' under the title of Cybena.

Virtual Reality is not simply a toy, it has huge implications for the worlds of science, education and art. Every new technology has an effect on the society in which it finds itself. If computer games caused a few ripples, cyberspace is going to make a big splash. What will be the effect on people if they are offered the opportunity to spend their leisure time immersed in imaginary worlds at a cyberspace 'hub'? Like the Total Immersion video games in Red Dwarf, cyberspace has the power to seriously mess with your mind. The phenomena has already thrown up a group of people who are passionately interested in the uses and abuses of the medium and its power as an artist's tool. These are the Reality Hackers. They range from cyberpunk authors like Ruby Rucker and William Gibson to research psychiatrists and 'hard' scientists. They even have their own magazines, the superb MONDO 2000, published from Berkeley, California, by the strange genius of R.L.U. Sinus and Queen Mu. Dedicated to exploring every aspect of virtual reality MONDO 2000 is in its own words, "here to cover the leading edge in hyperculture. We'll bring you the latest in human/technological interactive/mutational forms as they happen."

R.L.U. Sinus is certain Virtual Reality is going to change your life. "I believe technology defines the way we live rather than the old idea of society creating the technology it needs, it's exactly the other way around; technology creates the society it needs. We have to prepare for it now, because there will be precious little time when it does arrive. Experiments have shown that cybernauts often feel they are interacting with a bigger world than the computer actually provides. The senses are so totally stimulated, the brain's ability to disbelieve what it is experiencing is largely bypassed. Cybernauts invent details of their own to flesh out of the bare bones of the computer word."

It'll probably be another fifteen years before cyberspace is widely available. Currently artists and technologists alike are working side-by-side with a whole range of variations on the cyberspace theme from voice-recognition, fibreoptic link-ups between cybernaut and total body suits. It certainly does look that, in the words of software company Autodesk's John Walker that "Reality will not be enough when people see cyberspace." But what next? Enthusiastically R.L.U. Sinus has an answer "three-dimensional holography"

Checks away for the UN Squadron

U.N. SQUADRON

And you thought the U.N. Peace Keeping Forces were purely concerned with non-aggression and building bridges? Well you were wrong. In U.N. Squadron you are invited to do some serious pre-emptive dialing and there's certainly none of that pinko only-fire-when-fired-upon nonsense that most of us traditionally associate with the Force.

U.N.S. is a horizontally-scrolling aerial shoot 'em up in which you get to play one of three peace-loving pilots, each with their own particular aircraft. The choices are between a Dane (for some reason), a Japanese and American pilot. Although the introductory screens list (faster than the eye can see) each craft's specifications in great detail, all you really have to know is that the American plane has the most firepower, the Japanese fighter is the nippest around the screen and the Danish klie has two-way fire, allowing you to strafe the ground and air simultaneously.

Quite who and where the troublesome enemy are isn't absolutely clear, but there are plenty of them ranged across a bewildering variety of backgrounds and boasting an impressive diversity of hardware.

Once you and your optional player-two have chosen your craft, level one pits you against ground-based tanks and emplacements and airborne jets and helicopters. There's an end-of-level boss, natch, in the form of an enormous ironclad tank which spews missiles in every direction and needs plenty of blasting to quieter.

Level Two is completely air-bored, and considerably more testing than the first. Now you begin to appreciate the power-ups which are offered to you for wiping out certain waves of fighters. In particular, the shields start to look very attractive, as jets fly from the left (i.e. behind you) at great speed. The bosses here are huge stealth fighters which appear in front of you and drop increasingly dense clusters of indestructible air-mines for you to fly into.

Level Three sees you tearing over what must presumably be western Europe, a green and pleasant land crammed with gun emplacements, tanks and armoured trains, and later levels bring you over deserts and even into caves.

At the end of each level you have the opportunity to purchase enhancements for your fighters from an extremely unofficial looking arms dealer.

U.N. Squadron is a very pretty, perfectly competent and — particularly as the levels progress — reasonably challenging shoot 'em up. Worth a few ten pence of any blastlong fan's hard-earned. Quite what the secretary general of the U.N. would think of this kind of unilateral aggression, though, is anybody's guess.

JALECO

Lovers of sit-in driving games have never had it so good. Of course, they tend to have to shell out a quid a time to indulge their addiction, but there's no doubt that the larger coin-op companies are pulling out all the stops to produce ever-more realistic and innovative racing 'n' chasing games.

Jaleco's Big Run continues in this tradition. The game is based upon the Paris to Dakar rally, with the emphasis being heavily upon offroad driving in extremely rugged conditions (the race itself starts in Tunisia, the European leg, it seems, was considered too easy for anything more than a few tasty introductory screens).

The road starts out as a fairly standard twisting motorway lined with authentic sponsors' billboards (some of which disintegrate impressively if you smash into them), trees, barrels and other obstacles, but soon degenerates into rock strewn mountain passes, scrubland and desert.

Your vehicle combines the speed of the fastest of the newer drivalongs with the suspension of Buggy Boy and with the excellent "sensurround" feature of the cabinet it really feels like you're bouncing over rocks and boulders.

Big Run has also decided that it was high time that the more aggressive drivers were given a look-in. The horn on the steering wheel works and its selective use is actually recommended to force other road-hogs out of your way. Be sure to give them a good toot, in particular if you happen to be on the thin mountain passes or you're likely to find yourself at the foot of a ravine.

The pace of Big Run is pretty rollicking — cornering is tough, and one smash will almost certainly obliterate you. The time limit is incredibly tight, however, so you can't really afford to drive carefully either — it's just a case of foot to the floor, hand on the horn and hops for the best.

Although the cabinet itself doesn't actually possess hydraulics, the combination of sound, vibration and graphics do go a long way towards remedying this omission.

This certainly is as good as anything else on offer in the world of the sh-ins. The only serious problem with it is likely to be that its challenge may prove a little bit too tough — and expensive — for the Sunday drivers amongst you. Not recommended for the Merck Thatchers of the world.

Tommy's TIPS

Printing kit

● I have several questions to ask you and would be most grateful for a reply.

After recently purchasing a STAR LC-10C colour printer, Commodore 64 version, I am now considering buying an Amiga computer. I am wondering if there is an interface which will make the Amiga and the printer compatible. Is the PrintLink[®] that is available from Dimension Computers any use? Does another company produce such an interface?

In our school there is a RM NIMBUS network. Is the Star LC-10 colour printer compatible (parallel or Commodore version).

The above-mentioned network uses MS-Dos. Is the Amiga compatible? By that I mean will Amiga programs run on it, and vice versa.

Is there any CBM 64 software that enables full use of the colours available on the STAR LC-10 colour printer. Are there any programs on the Amiga to do this?

Nicholas Hayward, Brescan, Pouws.

Printlink is designed specifically to allow the Amiga to use CBM serial printers, which includes the Star LC-10C with the CBM interface. I believe Trilogic also produce a similar system to do the same job.

As for the RM Nimbus, there is no way that you can use the CBM serial version, although the parallel version could be used. The Amiga 4500 is not an MS-DOS machine, although there is a company (Nine One) which have a network system that allow several different standards of computer to be linked through a common network. However, since you don't appear to have this type of network it means that the Amiga cannot be tied into the system unless the are of the 2000 variety with an IBM bridgeboard fitted.

You cannot run any Amiga programs on the RM, but you can run some IBM programs on an Amiga by means of a program called 'The Transformer' which is an IBM emulator. Finally, there are a few programs for the C64 which can make use of the LC-10 colour printing. Any of the WP programs which permit the inclusion of ASCII codes (such as Vizavrite etc) will allow printing in the main 7 colours, while some of the later paint programs designed to work with the Epson JV-80 will also work.

As for the Amiga, just about every paint program can make full use of the colour printing by specifying the JV-80 preferences driver. While you won't get every subtle shade from printing the screens, the results can be quite good.

Printer pinned

● I am considering buying an Epson LQ500 and I have a few queries which I hope you would answer for me.

1. What is the difference between a printer with 9 or 21 pins?

2. Is the LQ500 worth its price or is there a printer around that price that's better value?

3. Can the printer print pictures from art utilities such as Photo Paint?

4. Is the LQ500 only capable of printing in black and white or is it possible to print in a few colours say with a special ribbon or cartridge?

5. What sort of leads are required for connection to my Amiga?

6. Do you think that the CAD program X-Cad designer is any good? (Lau-yin Tsang, Batlev, Oxford).

The first thing to clarify is that there is no such beast as a 21 pin printer. The flavours that have been produced so far are 9-pin (most cheap printers), 18-pin (strictly a Canon venture), 24-pin (new LQ mode printers) and non-even a 48-pin printer (Japanese of course!). The main differences are that a 24 pin printer can print smaller dots and more of them to make up a letter. The result is the letters do not look so 'fuzzy' and with the inter-pin spaces filled in by the extra dots the type begins to look very much like daisy-wheel quality.

A 9-pin printer can attempt a similar thing by going over the letters more than once, slightly offset to also fill in the gaps. While the two end results may be similar, the 24-pin will always have the edge in quality and is usually twice as fast, as it does its LQ mode in a single pass of the print head. As for the LQ-500 being worth the money, it's about par for the course with the new printer prices. However, I personally favour the STAR LC24-10 printer which has more features, such as paper parking and extra fonts, and if you hunt around is available as low as £225 (+ VAT) (HMP £289).

Provided you can get one of the preference printer drivers to work with the printer, either of these will be able to produce pictures from Photon Paint. Neither of these printers has a colour option though. With Epson you would have to go up-market to the LQ-460 to get colour, while with STAR you can get the LC-10C for around £225 (+ VAT). The latter works very well with the Amiga, using the JA-50 printer driver. Provided you have the A500, then any standard IBM to Centronics printer cable will work. If you have the A1000 then you will need a specially wired cable; do not use a standard cable under any circumstances!

Finally, X-CAD does allow you to draw diagrams on screen, but before you can decide whether it is any good for you, you must decide what you want to use it for and therefore what features it must have. If it has all those features and is to the required accuracy and resolution, then it's good. If it doesn't fit your requirements, then it's no good for that particular task and you will need to look again. Real CAD normally requires a plotter rather than a dot-matrix printer, to avoid the lines being made up of dots. It's all down to the use that you intend to put the CAD program.

Sprite data

● I have several programming queries on the 64.

1. Why can't sprite data be used at locations 4096-8192 — my sprites look like weird letters and signs? I am writing a complex program, and need all the available memory I can get. I have 4k of sprite data to be placed at 2048. 'Basic' is out of the way, but my sprite data uses locations over 4096 up to 8144.

2. Can I make the VIC chip point the sprite data somewhere over location 16384?

Thank you for any help you can give me.

I. Fu, Chesterfield.

Apart from the fact that your BASIC program normally resides from 2048 upwards there is no reason why you cannot store your sprite data there. However, when you say you have 'moved' BASIC out of the way, are you quite sure that what you intend to do is to move the start of the program area safely above the end of your sprite data? If you haven't done this then writing your program, or storing m/c routines, may have overwritten the data. If you really want maximum use of the main memory for the program then why not move the whole screen, sprite pointers and sprite data into the area above C000 (49152). Due to the limitation of the VIC chip, the screen and the sprite data have to reside in the same 76k bank of memory, but that bank can be anywhere (provided it doesn't clash with something else). By moving the whole lot out of the normal BASIC RAM area you release all the memory from 1024 — 4095 for use by a program. The example below shows you how to move the screen and sprite data to C000 and you can then utilise the method in your own program.

Virus scare

● I have recently purchased a second disk drive for my Amiga, and I am wondering if I can use it as DF0; to load games in rather than using the internal disc drive. I have also caught the byte bandit virus from a software hire library and using virus x1 has deleted it from my disks. What I want to know is if it is still inside the computer, and if so, how can I get it out?

I am considering whether to buy a sound and picture digitiser. Can you tell me if there is a reasonably priced sound digitiser which can be used to sample a record and play it back and if not what is the best I can expect?

Marc Blackie,

London SE4.

You can only autoload a workbench disk from DF0; so if you want to load and run a program merely by putting it into the drive when the 'hand' appears then the simple answer is that you cannot use an external drive for this. I don't quite see what the advantage is of using the external drive, since unless you have expansion memory fitted, you may even have to switch out the second drive in order to retain enough RAM to run some programs. If you just want to be able to run games from DF1; so that you even get the wear on the drives, then run them from workbench or a CLI. If you still want them to autorun on boot-up then use a disk in DF0; which includes in its Startup file a run command for the game in DF1.

As for the virus, this resides on disk sectors. Apart from the battery backed clock, and of course ROM, all memory in the computer is lost whenever the power is turned off. What you must ensure is that you test all your disks before assuming that you are free of the virus. If you have done that then you should be OK.

There are several sound digitisers on the market for the Amiga and it is really a question of finding one that meets your price criteria as they are all capable of storing sounds. Your main problem is much more likely to be a lack of memory, since most digitisers can only store a few seconds of sound without expansion memory being fitted. You will need at least 2 Mbytes of expansion RAM if you want to even think about storing a record. Much of the digitised sound you hear is in fact a small section repeated many times. The same applies to picture capture. Digiview Gold is probably the most popular video digitiser for capturing TV images, but there are equally good hand-held cameras that can be used for both colour and B&W pictures in conjunction with graphics programs such as Opaint II or III. Again, expansion RAM will determine just how complex or large the captured image will be. If you do not already have at least a 512 kbyte RAM expansion then get one without delay before purchasing any form of digitiser.

ONLY POOLS AND HORSES

FOOTBALL BOXFOM 114 85 (+ £2 for 3" disc)

The BEST pools program by a BEST writer who has been professionally employed as such by the leading pools company. He KNOWS how to help you and the PROGRAM has forecast an average 50% more brains than would be expected BY PURE CHANCE FOOTBALL BOXFOM is not a gimmicky pay thing but a serious statistical analysis of football form. Its sole objective is to improve the chances of winning on the pools or find odds and no other program comes near to matching the program as thorough horse. Analyt and draw the show on kind of merit and true odds given for every match. Most tables show at a glance the latest currency in form and odds having a keen spin. Covers league and non-league.

BOXFOM & HARBICAP WINNER 114 85 (+ £2 for 3" disc)

Two programs for the price of one. Easy to use and they never go out of date. All you need is a few minutes with a stub paper. HARBICAP weighs up a race by considering the many factors of form. Easily understood to all the horse & jockey.

HARBICAP WINNER shows the value for money bets. Hundreds of winners in horsepools. The year in 20 1/2 2011, 111, 151, etc. etc.

WEEKLY PRICE OF £2.85 (+ £2 for 3" disc) for all of the above programs

Why pay inflated prices? MEET CLAYTON and get the BEST available on tape or disc for SPECTRUM, COMMODORE, AMS CPC, BBC etc. from:

BOCKOFF (UK), 85 Adams Meadow, Neaton, South Wyrley, WLSA S52

OUTER LIMITS

FLASH UNIT ▼

If you see yourself as a character out of the 50's Hollywood movie, why not carry the camera to match your image? Olympus' latest 35mm costs £300.

ROBOTIC DANCING ▼

went out with technopop, but don't tell MR DJ that. Tomy's latest AM/FM radio grooves to the sounds which peer out its speaker. Price £19.95 from Kwik at the address opposite.

SOUND AND VISION ▲

are combined in this beautiful neon speaker which strobes in time to the music. You'll never have to hire disco lights for a party again. Price: £355 (for the pair match) from Testaroma, 19 Shore Gardens, Covent Garden, London.

KICKER CONSPIRACY ▶

Why waste time on the dissemination of football club programmes when foxes speak the real truth? "Whose Game Is It Anyway?" collects the best from around 200 available. It costs £5.95 from Sportpages, Charing Cross Road, London and all good book shops.

◀ ARTEFACT

We don't make a habit of recommending records, but this one was made (as some of you will know) by one time staff writer Nick Kelly, as we'll make an exception. On release now in 7" and 12", catalogue number 12 thal.

◀ TIME, CAMERA, ACTION

film buffs can add this studio light clock to their director's chair and clapperboard photo frame. Available from Hods, 26 Wardour Street, price £15.

A suitable dog and bone for the extra terrestrial among you. This neon lit piece costs £178.95 from Testarossa (address opposite).

EMAP (and some others) v. The Rest Of The World: The Ed, half at his feet as usual, reflects on the state of things at the charity footie match.

What happened? Where are we? One minute we were talking amongst ourselves the next — nothing. All we know is the Editor was standing over us muttering something about us not bothering to check facts and how we deserved it. RVF, VFR, FRV it's all the same to us.

So we missed another issue whilst we were in hospital. Never mind, pull up a visitor's chair, pass us the grapes and we'll fill you in on all the goings and comings in the wacky world of software. What a wild and woolly time it's been.

It all began with a charity soccer match held in September at Luton's vile Kenilworth Road pitch. Four sides there competed for the honour of... what was the honour, anyone? Oh, winning. The publishers' team consisted of journeus from the mags, mostly representatives of EMAP. It was a masterful fighting display which took us through the qualifier to the final, and, agonisingly, penalties. The Ed converted his in true Ray Stewart style, but the cup slipped away from the team after an EMAP publisher blazed wildly over the bar and the referee intervened to offer the opposition another penalty after they missed one. Altogether now 'Who's the b@*t@d in the black?'

The big event though, as ever, was the PC Show. Regular readers will know that this is generally the biggest excuse for getting wasted the software industry knows. The Show was, well, like it always is really, except that there was probably even less to see and get excited about than there usually is, with fewer machines to play and more rolling demos and videos. That should change next year, because TLW can exclusively reveal that there won't be a PC Show. Instead there will be the ECES, or the European Computer Entertainment Show to you and it'll be run by CU's publishers EMAP and organised with the help of all the home computer mags here including us. How's that for a Maxwell-like news exclusive?

At least the post Show parties didn't disappoint. Wednesday night began in a dignified manner with an EMAP cocktail evening in Chelsea. Everyone eventually adjourned to local hostelleres, where a TLW representative was bewildered to see a member of Mirrorsoft, fearing a bit of poaching, trying to prise a Bitmap brother away from Ocean's Gary Bracey using just about every trick in the book. Thursday night won the award for best 'do' with US Gold's night at The Lamelight club, which featured more Beck's than you've ever seen, an appearance by Rik Mayall and the sight of ACE ad manager Gary Williams doing The Timewarp solo on stage. Not to be outdone in the comic stakes Ocean produced none other than Bob Monkhouse for their evening, held in a big Italian restaurant in Kensington.

And that's that until it all begins again at Christmas with more industry parties and the celebrated Indin, at which the industry pats itself heartily on the back and gives away awards, judged by the magazine editors, to the year's top games. Any clues from the Ed for Game Of The Year? Only, he says, that it's not Passing Shot.

Seeing as we've mentioned games you might like to know what's happened to Rainbow Islands? Reviewed favourably by everyone, months ago, the game has yet to appear in the shops. The reason for this is a disagreement between Taito who own the game's rights and Micropross who now own Frebreud. No doubt mislearned friends are involved which means the prospect of seeing the game this side of Christmas must be dim. Let's hope not.

THE LAST

WORD

Awaken the beast within you!

ALTERED BEAST

Zeus has called upon you! Only a brave and fearless warrior can save his beloved daughter, Athena, from the cunning clutches of Neli, evil Lord of the Underworld.

Risen from the grave, you are presented with Supernatural powers beyond this world. Collect the 'mystical' spirit halves and transform into an awesome array of creatures - as Stronagman, punch and kick harder than ever before, as WereWolf and Were-Tiger rip the flesh of the demons of hell and as Bear, knock out your enemies with one 'bad breath'!

You hear the distant cries of the beautiful Athena and as the titans of the Underworld tighten their grasp, the beast within you rises to take the final battle!
